New in PE department Survival taught this fall

By LORI MAYER
Battalion Reporter

For students who prefer backpacking to basketball and shooting to soccer, Texas A&M University has several new courses lined up for next fall that may be of interest.

Backpacking, canoeing, shooting sports and survival are the two-hour courses offered. Students may sign up for one hour per semester to take care of the required PE (course numbers 101, 102, 201 and 202) and one hour for PE 301, 302 or 485.

The courses are designed for students interested in outdoors and nature. The backpacking course, taught by Camille Bunting, emphasizes in-depth knowledge of backpacking equipment, use of a map and compass and how to lead backpacking trips for school programs, summer camps and recreational programs.

Two weekend trips will be taken during the semester. Expenses will be shared by the class, and equipment will be provided by the PE department.

Dr. Mickey Little will teach the canoeing course, which requires interested students to be competent swimmers. The class will take two weekend canoe trips.

Shooting sports, taught by Tony Monzingo, will teach students proficiency with firearms and shooting sports equipment. Gun safety will be stressed in the class.

The class will shoot air rifles, shotguns, and small and large bore rifles. Skeet, trap and other shooting games will be introduced.

One or two field trips will be arranged. The class meets at the annex on Highway 21, and transportation will be provided to the annex by the PE department.

The survival course, also taught by Camille Bunting, is designed to give students knowledge and skills that will enable them to prevent life-threatening situations and to be able to act intelligently and decisively when confronted with a survival situation.

Among the topics to be covered are direction finding, fire making, shelters, food and basic first aid. Two weekend trips will be taken.

Students interested in taking one of the courses may get in touch with the instructor this semester and be put on a waiting list. When the time comes next fall to register for PE classes, the students may sign a list for the class.

By seeing the instructors this semester students may be assured of getting into the class for next fall.

Dentists' group agrees members may advertise

WASHINGTON — The American Dental Association has agreed not to interfere with the rights of its 130,000 members to advertise their services, the Federal Trade Commission said recently.

The agreement, which would settle a 1977 complaint against the association, is hinged on the outcome of a similar case involving the American Medical Association and advertising by physicians.

The dental group has agreed not to restrict truthful advertising by its members, the FTC said. At the same time, the ADA agreed to be bound by the final order in the AMA case, and on any court review of that decision which may follow.

The AMA case is currently before the four commissioners for a final decision. Its issues are basically the same as those in the dental case: restrictions on advertising have lessened competition by denying consumers the chance to comparison shop.

The AMA has contended it is not opposed to ethical advertising, but contends the FTC wants to eliminate all control by the doctors' group over advertising, which it has said could leave consumers prone to deception and quackery.

The AMA said it would fight any FTC decision it considers adverse all the way to the Supreme Court. By tagging its case to the AMA's, the dental group also would be bound by any eventual Supreme Court decision.

The ADA said dental advertising is already on the increase.

In Chicago at ADA headquarters, President Joseph Cappuccio said the settlement "would not require a major overhaul of the association's current policy on dentist advertising, which already permits dentists to advertise truthfully their services and fees for routine procedures."

It also would allow the association to impose sanctions against members who use false or misleading advertising, he said.
