DC-3 crashes — 3 die

United Press International
FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — A DC-3 cargo plane believed carrying three persons crashed in flames Tuesday in a small, grassy field within a few feet of Interstate 95, which was jammed with rush hour traffic.

There were no survivors found in the wreckage, but no one on the ground was hurt in the spectacular explosion and fire.

"It's a wonder it didn't kill somebody else — all those people on I-95. It was awful. Oh my God, it was terrible," said Richard Smalley, who watched the plane nose dive and crash as he drove along Cypress Creek Road.

Officials at nearby Fort Lauderdale executive airport said the plane was taking off when it crashed from an altitude of about 1,000 feet. "The only transmission from the pilot was normal traffic involved in taking off," said a controller at the airport control tower. "That's the last I heard. I saw it take off, veer to the left and crash."

Smalley, 52, said he was returning home from taking his wife to work when he saw the plane.

"It was about 1,000 feet over I-95 at the time I spotted it. Then it suddenly swerved to the left and dived into the ground," Smalley said. "It actually blew up when it hit. It must have had a full tank of gas."

Cheryl Florentino, a nurse who lives near the site of the crash, said "The plane was burning and I couldn't get near it. The emergency vehicles arrived soon after but they couldn't get near it right away."

Talmadge's ex-wife admits she took thousands from him

United Press International
WASHINGTON — Betty Talmadge testified Tuesday there could have been as much as $45,000 in $100 bills stuffed in the pocket of an old overcoat in the apartment she shared with her ex-husband, Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., when she took about a third of it in January 1974.

Mrs. Talmadge, testifying under protest before the Senate Ethics Committee, said for years she had dipped into the overcoat pocket to get extra cash to augment the $50 weekly living allowance Talmadge gave her during their 35-year marriage.

"Years," she replied when asked how long she had used the overcoat for extra money. "It was a way of life."

Talmadge faces five charges of financial misconduct that could result in a Senate vote for his censure or expulsion should the ethics committee uphold the allegations.

Earlier Tuesday morning, the committee overruled Mrs. Talmadge's tearful request to spare her from testifying in the financial misconduct case against her ex-husband on the grounds of "marital privilege." The committee said Mrs. Talmadge was able to testify about all matters except "confidential communications" that took place during the stormy 35-year marriage to the senator.

In January 1974, Mrs. Talmadge said she dipped into the overcoat after she had an angry confrontation with Talmadge and his two top aides. "I went home and reached for the usual source of cash," she said in a soft southern accent. "It was not there — in the hall closet. I found it in the guest room closet. I took at least a third of it (the cash that was in the overcoat at the time)."

Under questioning by committee special counsel Carl Eardley, Mrs. Talmadge said "I did not count it" but estimated she took "$12,000 or $15,000."

Then, Eardley put a cellophane packet containing 77 $100 bills before her, and Mrs. Talmadge identified them as the money she had turned over to committee investigators earlier this year.

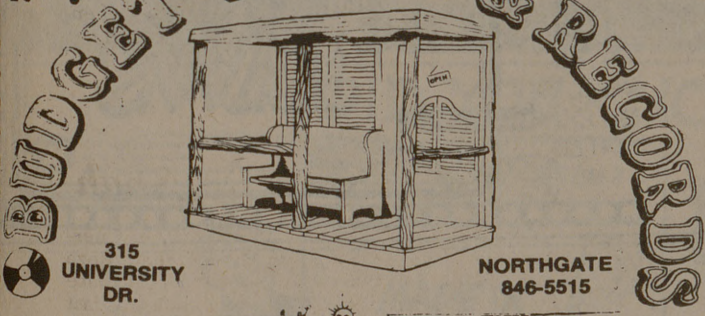

Mrs. Talmadge said the overcoat had been her source of cash "long before 1973" when Talmadge is accused of conspiring with his former top aide, Daniel Minchew, to open a secret bank account that would be used to launder $34,000 in false Senate expense checks.
