Less reliance on U.S.

Mideast pact affirmed

United Press International
HAIFA, Israel — The eighth summit between Egypt and Israel ended Thursday and reflected a mood toward greater self-reliance and less dependence on the United States. Egyptian President Anwar Sadat underscored the shift.

"The most important achievement of my visit is that we have cemented our agreements at Camp David and the peace treaty between Egypt and Israel and we are ready together, Menachem and I, to face whatever comes," Sadat told Israeli newspaper editors.

He offered to divert the waters of the Nile River as far eastward as Israel's southern Negev Desert to irrigate its parched wasteland.

"I am planning to bring the Nile waters to Sinai, after the tunnel we are building under the Suez Canal is completed in the summer of next year," Sadat said. "Well, why not send you some of this sweet Nile water to the Negev Desert as good neighbors."

"There are lots of possibilities, lots of hopes," between the two countries.

Sadat's remarks were indicative of the friendly atmosphere that prevailed throughout his 49-hour visit. He even offered to host the 230,000 residents of Haifa in Alexandria, which receives 1.5 million summer tourists yearly.

The move toward greater self-reliance was most evident in the agreement to establish Egyptian-Israeli military patrols to monitor the peace in Sinai, thus temporarily freeing the United States from commitment to set up a multinational force in the area, sources said.

Sadat said there may be some differences of opinion with Israel in the future, "but conflict, no. I do think there will be conflict between us."

He said he would welcome a summit with President Carter, emphasizing he did not say Wednesday there would be one.

German says fiancée flirt; Polish girl returned to Reo

United Press International
HAMBURG, West Germany — A West German tired of his Polish refugee fiancée's escapades organized her "delivery" across the Iron Curtain back into Eastern Europe on her 21st birthday.

"I wanted to deliver her back to the Eastern bloc," police quoted an unidentified 23-year-old West German welder arrested Tuesday.

The jealous fiance told police his girlfriend's "escapades" prompted his plan.

Hamburg police said the man's friend forced Joanna Chrupka, a friend of the groom, to take the trunk of a car and race through a border crossing into Germany last Thursday — has the fiancée's 21st birthday.
