Baptists to ignore election violations

United Press International

DALLAS — An investigator for the Southern Baptist Convention Wednesday said 284 illegal votes were cast for ultra-conservative Tennessee pastor Dr. Adrian Rogers as president, but that the church will neither undertake a recall nor attempt a new election.

Lee Porter, registration secretary for the organization, concluded at the end of a three-month investigation "we will never know" whether Rogers won the presidency of the 13 million-member group by fraud.

The election was held at the group's convention in Houston during June, and involved a critical confrontation between Rogers, the conservative and the liberal elements of the organizations.

The report, released in Dallas and Nashville, said it was possible that as many as 1,000 delegates, called "messengers," registered and voted without being elected by their churches, though most of them likely participated because of ambiguous election laws and not deliberate fraud. He said 69 children were illegally elected as delegates, 31 denomination workers and foreign missionaries voted illegally, 107 persons registered more than once and people voted for delegates who did not attend.

"We caught some messengers with blood on their hands," Porter told UPI, referring to the 284 registrations "which were absolutely out of line" and the 47 churches which elected more than the maximum of 10 messengers per church.

"There is no way, and there is no attempt, to overturn Rogers' election," Porter said. "No way. He will come up for election again in St. Louis (at the 1980 convention). Usually, we elect our president to two successive one-year terms.

"I do not anticipate any effort to overturn his election and I do not anticipate that he would have any opposition next year in St. Louis."

Porter said 2,000 ballot books were found during the investigation, with only the presidential race ballot torn out. They were then discarded with the delegates not bothering to vote on any of the many other issues and races that were being contested.

He also said 39 churches had delegates who were never elected or appointed but registered anyway. He said 31 of those worked for the Baptist Convention itself at various levels.

"Very sad," said Porter's one-paragraph, two-word response to the revelation.

Farm secretary urges energy independence

United Press International

DALLAS — Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland has called for an urgent national commitment to energy independence to preserve the national security of the United States.

Bergland said the nation needs more than the apathy of the past 20 years or anger over the diesel shortage and gas lines of last spring.

To end dependence on imported oil, he said, the nation needs "nothing less than public outrage that such a thing could happen to the most resourceful nation on the face of the earth."

The agriculture secretary said that farmers across the nation are asking him repeatedly if there will be enough fuel for harvest, just as last spring they asked if there would be enough for spring planting. He said there will be enough.

Last spring, farmers were guaranteed 100 percent of their fuel needs, which upset other people. Then farmers were upset when the special allocation was lifted, he noted.

The farmers' concerns were characteristic of most Americans, he said.

The "guts" of the issue is not so much energy as the security of the United States, Bergland said.

"I don't think that's too dramatic," he said. "I think it's honest, and frightening and real."

With the increasing dependence on imported oil, Bergland called for support of President Carter's proposals for fuel conservation and other independent resources of energy.
