Cholesterol buildup: 'TLC' may hold clue

United Press International
COLUMBUS, Ohio — Tender loving care works.

Skeptical Ohio State University researchers have found good, old-fashioned TLC may be one of the best treatments for preventing atherosclerosis, the buildup of cholesterol in the body's arteries.

The researchers stumbled onto the find as they were studying the effects of certain diets in laboratory rabbits.

Two groups of rabbits were fed the same high-cholesterol diets, but the group which was cuddled, individually fed and talked to, fared much better.

At least 14 rabbits that received TLC showed only half the evidences of lesions, or injuries, in the aorta, which are considered to be the forerunner of heart disease.

Actually, the researchers didn't set out to study how TLC affected the animals but were setting up a control group for a different experiment involving the impact of drugs on high-cholesterol diets.

"We can say that TLC, in these pilot studies, dramatically reduced atherosclerosis," said Fred Cornhill, assistant professor of surgery in OSU's College of Medicine. "And we've demonstrated it in three cases. The results were so bizarre we did it again and again."
