

Pilot misnomer puzzles officials

Colorado plane crash probed

United Press International
GUNNISON, Colo. — Federal officials investigating a light airplane crash that killed eight persons were puzzled Tuesday because the plane had the wrong registration number and the pilot apparently was using an assumed name.

The Cessna 210, on a flight from Prescott, Ariz., to Longmont, Colo., crashed Sunday night in a remote valley about 10 miles south of Gunnison, killing the seven adults and one child on board. The wreckage was found Monday.

Although a Cessna 210, a single-engine plane, is certified by the Federal Aviation Administration to carry only six persons, investigators said that would not necessarily be a violation if there were seat belts for each passenger.

What puzzled investigators was that the pilot had been identified by two different names and the plane was carrying the wrong identification number.

The pilot had identified himself as Gary Clark of Longmont when he radioed FAA flight service in Denver Sunday night asking for an instrument flight plan over the mountains, according to George A. Baker, chief of the National Transportation Safety Board in Denver.

Baker said the plane had been tied down at the Longmont Airport since Aug. 31 with the Judson Flying Service under the name of Gary Clark.

But in checking the identification number on the plane's wing, the FAA discovered that number actually was registered to a Cessna 175A Tuesday with a person who lived in Minneapolis.

"We kept checking and were told by the people at Judson that the pilot might have been Mike Arnot," Baker said.

Baker said the NTSB still was not certain of the identification of the pilot. He said the identification would be made by the Gunnison County coroner.

Bon Schiede of the NTSB said the board was more concerned with the cause of the crash. He said the board would be interested in the identification of the plane and the pilot only as it had bearing on the crash.

The FAA security office, however, also was investigating the crash for possible violations of federal regulations, including misidentifications. One of the possibilities being investigated was that the plane was stolen, Baker said.

Baker said there were two possible reasons why the plane carried a wrong registration number on the wing: because the Minneapolis plane had been deactivated and the number was given to the Cessna 210 without it being properly recorded, or because someone deliberately wanted to place the wrong number on the craft.

New solar heater may help farmers

United Press International
WASHINGTON — American farmers soon will be able to buy low-cost, easy-to-assemble solar units to dry grain or to heat their homes and farm buildings.

The Agriculture Department financed the development of a heater which could be constructed from basic materials, manufactured by small firms and installed by farmers and homeowners themselves.

"If they can do it, almost anyone can do it," quipped assistant secretary Alex Mercure.

Secretary Bob Bergland predicted the units, which are expected to cost $2,500, would become "a permanent part of our total rural scene."

The Agriculture Department holds the patent. Officials expect to license small firms to manufacture the units by January. Plans also will be available for people who want to build their own units.

Each unit includes 300 square feet of solar collectors divided among three sections. Stationary glass panels, like glass sliding doors, are placed on top of long, narrow black panels of sheet steel coated with an aluminum-zinc alloy.

Farmers and rural homeowners will be able to borrow funds from Agriculture Department agencies to finance purchase of the heaters. If final tests are successful, the Farmers Home Administration will offer solar heaters as an option on homes financed by the agency.

Mercurio said the nation could save 2 million barrels of oil a year if the heaters were used for 100,000 homes. He said the heater could reduce utility costs for a homeowner by 50 percent.

Claims of odd sexual conduct investigated

United Press International
SALISBURY, Md. — Authorities are investigating allegations that a man had sex with 100 male students at Salisbury State College last month over a period of three to five days.

College President Norman Crawford said he knew three weeks ago of the accounts of the alleged episode involving a 19-year-old woman student but did not contact police because the woman's family did not want him to.

Under Maryland law, it is a crime to have sex out of wedlock with a person who has been diagnosed as mentally deficient.

Police said Monday they are investigating the allegations. They said it was not known whether the woman was forced to engage in the sexual acts.

Crawford said he first learned of the situation when a faculty member reported a rumor of the incident to him.

He said the woman was then treated at the college health center and later taken to a psychologist and admitted to the Peninsula General Hospital at her own request.

Neurosurgeon uses microscope in brain surgery

United Press International
LEXINGTON, Ky. — A University of Kentucky surgeon has performed a delicate four-hour operation exploring a tumor connected to the brain stem of a 10-year-old boy.

Dr. John W. Walsh, assistant professor of neurosurgery and a pediatric neurosurgeon, performed the operation Monday at the UK Albert B. Chandler Medical Center on Sammy Burchell, son of Dolores and Samuel Burchell of Liberty, Ky.

"The mass was too ingrained to be removed, but a biopsy was performed to determine if the tumor is malignant or benign," said Pattie McLellan, a spokeswoman at the center.

She said the results will not be available for several days.

"What is so unusual about this operation is that it's the first time at the Medical Center that the brain stem has been operated on under microsurgical procedures," she said. "In this type of surgery, the surgeon uses an enlarged microscope."

Walsh's operation involved opening the back of Burchell's skull to look at the tumor, which had caused considerable swelling of the boy's head. McLellan said the tumor was affecting his balance, vision and speech.
