Nine die from shipwreck

United Press International
CALVESTON — The confirmed death toll in the collision of two ships off the Texas coast rose to nine Sunday with the recovery of two bodies from the water and one body found on the still-burning oil tanker. Officials said another 23 persons still were unaccounted for and were feared dead.

In the before-dawn hours of Thursday the freighter Mimosa slashed into the oil tanker Burma Agate, igniting raging fires on both vessels. Many crewmen on the ships were forced to jump overboard and many of those apparently never made it to shore.

Four bodies were recovered Thursday. On Friday and Saturday two more were located, one which has not been removed from the charred state room of the Mimosa pending a medical examiner's investigation.

Coast Guard spokesman Richard Griggs said the cutter Point Hope pulled two bodies out of the water at midday Sunday. A salvage crew hired by the owners of the Burma Agate boarded the burning ship Sunday and discovered a body that had previously been unaccounted for.

Griggs said there is still some concern that the Burma Agate would reignite.

"At least three tugs are still hosing the tanker," he said. "The primary concern is keeping decks and hull cool. There has been no effort to put it out so far. As long as it's burning you don't have a reflash.

"The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration is out marking the area of the spill. There's no way to know how much has spilled, but three tanks ruptured and we know whether others have what has spilled or burned."

The 482-foot Mimosa is a Burmah Agate both a Liberian register and represents the Liberian government. It is being investigated by the U.S. Coast Guard outside U.S. waters.

Ralph Shepherd, Blythe's attorney, said the suit was "for personal reasons of the student's family and said the received telephone through suit was filed earlier this year."

David Feldman, the District Judge Robert O. the suit was "patently frivolous" and "nothing more than padding."
