Texas schools get straight A's

United Press International
AUSTIN — The establishment of a new classification and elimination of one old division was announced by the University Interscholastic League for Texas high schools.

Almost every school in the state has been placed in a new class or district. It primarily affects the athletics programs but will also figure into all levels of school competition under the UIL.

Gone is the old Class B for the smaller schools. Beginning in 1980-81, they will be classified as Class A schools. And the largest high schools will be in Class AAAAA instead of Class AAAA. Other levels will be increased by one to Classes AA, AAA and AAAA. There will still be five classifications however.

Eliminated in most cases will be zone play. Instead, realignments will swap some schools into different districts and have all competition on a district level instead of a zone level.

The largest class AAAAA will be divided into 32 districts. Class AAAA will have 16 districts. Class AAA will consist of 32 districts. Class AA will have 32 districts and Class A will have 16 districts. Six-man football previously known as Class B six-man football will be listed only as six-man and will consist of eight districts.

As in previous years, the numbering of the districts begins in west Texas and moves across the state to east Texas and the Gulf Coast and then down to southwest Texas.

The realignment announcement was met with both mixed reaction from school officials and coaches of the schools moved into new surroundings.

In the Dallas area, several of this year's Class AAAA teams have been dropped back one classification and will remain AAAA next year while their previous league foes have moved into the new Class AAAAA. Dallas Adamson, Lincoln, Madison and North Dallas have been dropped back to the same district as Athens, Corsicana, DeSoto, Ennis, Lancaster, Mansfield, Seagoville and Waxahachie.

In the new Class AAAAA meanwhile, Dallas Highland Park was moved out of a district with Plano and Richardson schools and put into a district with Dallas suburb schools — Garland, North Garland, South Garland, Wilmer-Hutchins, Mesquite and North Mesquite.

The old class AAAA district now will include in Class AAAAA, Carrollton, Smith and Turner, Richardson's Berkner and Pearce, Lake Highlands and Richardson, Plano and Greenville.

In the Houston area, La Porte has been moved from an alignment with Pasadena, Baytown and Galena Park schools to the new class AAAAA district including Alvin, Dickinson, Galveston Ball, LaMarque, Pearland, Texas City and the League City schools.

The Abilene-Midland-Odessa-San Angelo district in West Texas remains unchanged in the new class AAAAA grouping. But in District 6, Wichita Falls and Wichita Falls Ryder will be joined by Dennison, Denton, Lewisville and Sherman. Other members of the old Wichita Falls district have been moved into a new alignment of Fort Worth schools — Arlington Heights, Dunbar, Eastern Hills, Paschal, Southwest, Trimble Tech, Western Hills and Wyatt.

Some school officials said the realignments would hurt attendance at athletic events and cost them thousands of dollars each year. Others however believed the new alignments would help their attendance. Most agreed however that it would take more than the two-year period for the new alignments to be accepted by everyone including the general public.

Officials decision 'close but correct'

United Press International
FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Those two fumbles or near-fumbles by Houston in the fourth quarter of its 13-10 comeback victory over Arkansas two weeks ago remain a topic of conversation.

Tom Turbiville, assistant information director for the Southwest Conference, said in a radio interview at halftime of the Rice-Arkansas game Saturday that conference officials considered both calls, "close but correct."

He ruled he was down before he fumbled.

In the radio interview with Turbiville, which was aired by the 91-station University of Arkansas football network, Turbiville said he heard Lahar discussing the findings of the film evaluation with Dotson Lewis who assists in the grading and overseeing of SWC officials.

When he heard about it Sunday, Arkansas coach Lou Holtz was visibly angry and called Hal Lahar, the SWC supervisor of officials. Holtz said Lahar confirmed what he had told the Arkansas coaching staff earlier, namely, that the conference office believes the two calls in favor of Houston to have been in error.

Houston tight end Garrett Jurgajtis was credited with a catch of a 14-yard pass on a crucial third-down play. Those who disputed the call maintained that the correct call should have been either a fumble after the completion which Arkansas recovered or an incomplete pass.

Later on a play that reached the Arkansas seven, Houston running back Terald Clark lost the ball and again Arkansas recovered. Officials

TUCK SCHOOL
A Top Graduate School of Business in Hanover, New Hampshire!

Tuck School is living proof that a leading business school need not be located in a big city. While Executives-in-Residence and other representatives of the business community form a steady stream of visitors to the School, Tuck students enjoy the fine facilities of Dartmouth College in a beautiful New England setting. The problems of city life can be put aside, at least temporarily, in favor of academic concerns.

Murdough Center, built in 1973, provides modern classrooms, a 358-seat auditorium, and the excellent services of Feldberg library. Adjoining Murdough Center is the rest of the Tuck complex: three dormitories, Stell Dining Hall, and Tuck Hall, where faculty and administrative offices and additional classrooms are housed. These, together with the cultural and recreational facilities of Dartmouth College and its environs, make the Tuck School attractive to students, faculty, and visitors alike.

During the past year more than 190 companies sent representatives to Tuck to recruit from its 135 graduating students. (A Placement Report is included in the Tuck Bulletin.) And, each year 25 managers from industry come to Career Expo, a two-day symposium, to share their knowledge and experience in their respective fields. Numerous guest speakers participate in the classroom throughout the year, and distinguished overseers contribute their expertise to the direction of the School.

Access to Boston and New York is easy. Both cities are served by interstate highways, bus and a scheduled airline from Lebanon, NH, a few miles from Hanover. In addition, Amtrak provides service to and from New York.
