Media show vets fairly, poll shows

United Press International
WASHINGTON—Americans do not blame the news media for the negative feelings some people have of Vietnam veterans but, in fact, think the soldiers were portrayed favorably, according to a new Harris poll released Saturday.

Some 68 percent of the public said things they saw, read and heard about Vietnam veterans gave them a favorable impression, according to the poll, conducted at the request of President Carter and the Veterans Administration.

Only 25 percent report that things they saw, read and heard from the news media gave them an unfavorable impression of the veterans.

The section on public perceptions on the role of the news media is part of a larger survey of a 1,200-person representative sample conducted by Lou Harris and Associates on attitudes toward Vietnam era veterans.

Despite the general finding that Americans got a favorable impression of the soldiers from their newspapers and television stations, the survey said, there are "some important differences in how the public perceives the television coverage of both the war and the veterans who fought in it emerge from the data."

"For example, overall, 40 percent of the public believe that the television news stories they have seen about the war in Vietnam gave a fairly realistic picture of the violence there, 14 percent believe that these stories exaggerated the violence, and 34 percent believe that these stories underplayed the extent of the actual violence in that conflict. However, these opinions are far from uniform."

The poll said young people tend to feel television news reporting of the war understated the violence and drug use, while older people feel that the major networks tended to focus more than necessary on events such as the My Lai massacre and the use of hard drugs.

The survey said respondents with better educations and those living in households whose heads are employed in better jobs "are significantly more likely to report that the impressions given them of Vietnam era veterans have been negative than are their less privileged counterparts."

It said age is "strongly correlated" with the degree to which the public is likely to feel that television news coverage exaggerated or underplayed the killing of innocent civilians by Americans.

Official's DWI trial to begin

United Press International
CORPUS CHRISTI — The often-delayed drunk driving trial of Selma police chief and city manager Tom Holland is scheduled again this week, barring any further postponements.

This time the trial, which has been delayed three times for various reasons, is scheduled for Tuesday in Corpus Christi on a change of venue. The last time it was supposed to start, it was in Victoria on a change of venue. Bexar County-Court-at-Law Judge Rose Spector is presiding in the case in which Holland was arrested last Dec. 13 in the San Antonio suburb of Live Oak.

Holland presides over a reputed speed trap in Selma, also a San Antonio suburb, which has earned the small town the nickname of "Valley of the Bears" among citizen's band operators.

$20.2 million deficit Vatican reveals debt

United Press International
VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II, fearing that "myths" of immense wealth damage the church's image, has ordered the partial lifting of secrecy that has shrouded Vatican finances for 2,000 years.

The Vatican Friday announced a 1979 budget deficit of $20.2 million.

No figures were released on activities of the Vatican bank, the annual Peter's Pence collections or on the Vatican's vast holdings, estimated at up to $38 billion in choice real estate and priceless art treasures.

The unprecedented disclosure of a deficit was made Friday in a communique marking the end of a historic five-day congress of the College of Cardinals—the first such gathering of church princes in 400 years.

"If spending continues to increase at the present rate, particularly through increased inflation and the cost of living, and if revenues remain at the present level, the Holy See could be in serious difficulty within the next few years," the statement said.
