Iran on hunger strike, demands shah's return

United Press International
TEHRAN, Iran — Iran went on a five-day hunger strike Monday to underscore an unbending vow to hold more than 60 Americans hostage in the occupied U.S. Embassy until the shah is brought back to face trial.

The hostages were fed as usual. More than 400 students holding 90 hostages, including 60 Americans, started the fast and thousands of soldiers, government employees, teachers and students outside the compound joined them.

A spokesman for the students' occupation committee told UPI the hostages had not been asked to join the fast.

"They eat what we eat and they're eating while we are not today (Monday)," he said.

He said the hostages had been served breakfast and lunch Monday, although the students themselves were observing the hunger strike.

The state radio said some "American agents" had attacked other embassies in Tehran and harassed some foreigners. It urged Iranians to beware of the attackers who, it said, were trying to distract the revolutionary people from their set path.

The radio gave no details of the attacks.

Acting Foreign Minister Abol Hassan Bani-Sadr Monday met with foreign ambassadors and diplomatic representatives to press for the shah's extradition.

The Ettelaat newspaper, quoting officials of the Islamic Revolutionary Council, said the government was considering an oil embargo "if Imam Khomeini permits" and withdrawal of Iranian funds from U.S. banks.

The Kayhan newspaper said Iranian university officials were preparing to receive Iranian students expelled from the United States.

The fast came in response to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's declaration Saturday that Iranians would rather starve than relinquish their honor. Khomeini made the remark in a speech rejecting a papal request to intervene to free the hostages, conveyed to him by Vatican envoy Monsignor Annibale Bugnini.

Bugnini Sunday visited the 60 hostages and reported the captives were "mentally tired" but in good health.

Islamic Revolutionary Council member Mohammad Mofatteh, accompanied by other powerful clergymen, went to see the students begin the marathon fast at the embassy. He urged them to press on with their campaign to have the shah brought back for trial in Iran.

The state radio Monday attacked the United States for its "pretensions of concern for human rights, which has been exposed so many times in Western films depicting American atrocities against the red Indians."

Press reports said Ayatollah Moosavi Khoyeni, the Moslem religious leader who led the attack on the embassy Nov. 4, might be promoted to the membership in the powerful Islamic Revolutionary Council which took over the country when Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan resigned last Tuesday.

In Beirut, Lebanon, Sunday, a group of 100 students briefly occupied the courtyard of the U.S. Embassy and burned an American flag. Syrian peace-keeping forces, using their boots and the butts of their rifles, evicted the demonstrators after 90 minutes.

Bedridden shah follows takeover

United Press International
NEW YORK — The shah of Iran is spending more time watching news reports to follow the latest developments in the takeover of the U.S. Embassy in Iran by Moslem students, a spokeswoman for the deposed monarch said.

The spokeswoman said Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi, recovering from a gallbladder operation at New York Hospital, is aware of the furor that the takeover of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran has provoked in the United States.

A hospital spokesman said the shah was listed in good condition. About 40 American demonstrators marched outside the hospital Sunday, protesting the takeover of the embassy.

The group, a coalition of college students and war veterans, arrived in a motorcade from Long Island and marched across the street from the Manhattan hospital.

Doctors have postponed the shah's scheduled chemotherapy treatments for cancer of the lymph nodes because his condition is unstable. He has been undergoing radiation treatment.

The shah underwent surgery Oct. 24 for removal of his gallbladder. His doctors plan to use non-surgical methods in an attempt to remove gallstone that is blocking his bile duct.

Domestic violence worries officials

United Press International
Officials are concerned for the safety of Iranian nationals in the United States because of increasingly violent confrontations with Americans angered by the U.S. Embassy takeover in Tehran.

In Denver, an American teenager lost his life Sunday when a harried Iranian fired a rifle into a group that had lobbed a rock through his window, police said.

Motorists honked horns in support of about 200 flag-waving demonstrators along Washington's Embassy row, calling for the deportation of Iranian students.

The mounting fervor prompted concern, especially on the college campuses that are home to thousands of Iranian students.

Campus police at the University of Wyoming took precautions to protect Iranian students who received death threats.

A coalition of Long Island (N.Y.) organizations said it would like to see all Iranian students placed in protective custody "to prevent them from facing any harm" at the hands of angry Americans.

Police in Denver said Afshin Shariati, 24, was in custody for the fatal shooting of Paul Morityky, 16, and the wounding of a companion.

Officers said Shariati was apparently awakened early Sunday by a rock that shattered window glass in his apartment. He ran out with a rifle and fired in the direction of the boys who were running for their car.

Police were unable to confirm whether Shariati was a U.S. citizen or a visiting student.

In New York, about 40 American demonstrators, calling for the release of hostages in Tehran, marched outside the hospital where the shah of Iran is undergoing cancer treatments.

Iran crisis is cause

Mexico closes Embassy

United Press International
MEXICO CITY — Mexico, where the deposed shah of Iran lived for five months, has announced that it is temporarily closing its embassy in Iran because of "the situation prevailing in that country."

The four-paragraph statement issued Monday by the Foreign Ministry did not refer specifically to the American hostages held at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, nor to the strained relations between Mexico and Iran.

The ousted Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi moved to Mexico in June. He came to New York last month to undergo medical treatment for gall stones and lymph cancer.

The statement said the embassy closure "is of temporary character and is due exclusively to the situation prevailing in that country, which does not guarantee that our diplomatic mission in Tehran can continue operating."

The communique said Mexico's business attache and other embassy personnel have already left Tehran. It said the Mexican government will continue to provide the Iranian Embassy in Mexico with all diplomatic guarantees.

Relations between Iran and Mexico have been strained since the exiled shah and his family came to live in Cuernavaca, 50 miles south of Mexico City.
