Mental patient re-enacts siege

United Press International
KNOXVILLE, Tenn.—A mental patient returned to the business college where he had asked students to witness his threatened suicide in September, and restaged the scene before surrendering to police after 11 hours.

Louis Posey, 27, finally put down his 30-30 rifle and ended Monday's siege at the Knoxville Business College after talking to Teresa Robinson, a student who had been one of his hostages in September.

Posey was on a 10-day leave from Lakeshore Mental Health Institute, where officials said he was responding well to treatment. He was progressing so well he had been allowed to spend weekends with his widowed mother in Oneida.

Friends said Posey felt "inferior" because of a limp resulting from a wreck in 1966. An exhausted Capt. Doug Norman, who conducted negotiations with the partially crippled ex-student of the business college, said "it was his overwhelming desire to talk to Teresa" that led to his surrender.

He was ordered held under $100,000 bond on charges of aggravated assault and armed assault for pointing his rifle at two officers.

The Knoxville hostage situation was the longest of three such episodes Monday, all of which ended without violence.

In Florence, Ky., Joe Blair, 23, of Clarksville, Ohio, had a falling out with his 19-year-old girlfriend. Armed with a shotgun, he took four employees hostage at the jean distribution store where she worked, although she was not there. He surrendered peacefully after six hours.

In Jackson, Ala., a pistol-wielding woman, denied a job in a supermarket, held three hostages in a state employment office for three hours before surrendering. She said the store manager told her he did not trust blacks.

Boyhood friends of the Knoxville gunman said Posey had once wanted to be a motorcycle daredevil, but was seriously injured in a 1966 wreck.

Posey grew more depressed about a year ago when his father died. Still, acquaintances said, he presented a cheery exterior.

"I used to talk to him nearly every day," said Jennifer Neal, a student at the school Posey attended until the first siege. "He was always the class clown. All he talked about was Charlie's Angels and the Dallas Cowboy cheerleaders."

Monday, he walked into a third-floor psychology classroom where about 30 students were studying deviant behavior. Waving his rifle, he agreed to let the students leave, one by one, but held one student and the instructor as hostages.

The two women, Jane Johnston and Ann Norton, were allowed to leave after negotiations began. The talks did not go well, however, until the nervous Robinson was brought to the downtown school.

They talked for a few moments before Posey was brought out the front door, uncuffed, by two officers.

After the September incident, which lasted four hours, Posey told police he "wanted some people watching" when he killed himself.

He was ordered to undergo mental treatment at the Lakeshore facility. A doctor, who asked not to be identified, said Posey had been home nearly every weekend.

"We had no reason to think there was any danger," the doctor said. "He is not psychotic."

Other unions support Kennedy

Union backs Carter

United Press International
WASHINGTON — The 625,000-member Communication Workers of America Tuesday endorsed President Carter for re-election, less than a day after several hundred union leaders gave a rousing reception to Sen. Edward Kennedy.

CWA President Glenn Watts, who was an early personal supporter of Carter's candidacy, told a news briefing that a Carter-Kennedy battle could hand the White House to conservative politicians for 20 years. "With Jimmy Carter, we can win," Watts said. "Without him, we cannot."

Of Kennedy's candidacy, Watts said, "Now that he has challenged President Carter, I see the danger of a fatal split in the ranks of Democrats, which could hand the presidency to a Ronald Reagan or a John Connally — both of whom are completely unacceptable to organized labor."

On Monday night, only hours after Lane Kirkland had been installed to succeed George Meany as president of the AFL-CIO, delegates to the 13th biennial AFL-CIO convention turned to national politics and a cocktail reception for Kennedy sponsored by 16 union leaders.

"It is time to put a real Democrat in the White House," Kennedy said.

Speaking at a cocktail reception sponsored by 16 union presidents, he assailed Carter's wage-price guidelines and his inability to win congressional victories on major labor legislation.

"Workers are being ripped off when wages are being held to 7 percent while prices are being allowed to rise 13 percent a year," Kennedy said to a loud cheer.

'Ziggy' creator campaigns to begin week on Mondays

United Press International
NEW YORK — The creator of the "Ziggy" cartoon strip is waging a one-man battle to change calendars so they begin on a Monday instead of Sunday.

"I feel like I'm attacking Mom, apple pie and the church," cartoonist Tom Wilson of Cleveland said Monday.

Wilson, 48, vice president of a greeting card company that makes calendars, has run into strong opposition to the idea from company executives. He said the executives told him

"people are used to having the calendars start on a Sunday." "But changing it to Mondays is more in keeping with people's life styles," he said. "People start the work week on Mondays."

The creator of the 8-year-old strip said calendar-makers told him even if the week was changed, the new calendar couldn't go into effect until at least 1981.

"Any time you challenge tradition, you're in for it," Wilson said. "But this is a case where tradition is entirely wrong."
