

Women says bed houses devil's face

United Press International
VICTORIA, British Columbia — Norma Harris insists a devil is hiding in the headboard of her antique bed. Her husband says she has been watching too much television.

"We bought the bed from friends in Winnipeg 16 years ago," Mrs. Harris said Thursday. "Everything was fine until about a month ago. The face of a demon suddenly appeared in the walnut vener of the headboard."

The gargoyle in the wood grain disturbed her so much that she called in a Roman Catholic priest to perform an exorcism, she said. He told her it was merely a pattern in the wood and advised her to call in a furniture expert.

Antique furniture expert Pat Matthews agreed it was only an unusual pattern in the wood, but his wife, Peggy, was on was on Mrs. Harris' side.

Economist: Young lingering at home

United Press International
ATLANTA — An Atlanta economist who predicted last spring's gas station lines says inflation, energy shortages and uncertain economic times are keeping young people dependent on their parents for a longer time.

"The empty nest may not be so empty anymore there is more of a hanging on," said Professor Fred Allvine, an economist at the Georgia Institute of Technology, who believes the American family is going to have to stick together more than it has in the past to survive economically.

Allvine said it has been his own observation that young people, after getting their degrees, are finding it difficult to break away from the family and support themselves "and they're moving back in with their parents."

Some families, he said, are converting their homes and garages to accommodate the return of their young.

Ties to the family are being extended, said Allvine. "I think it's coming as a shock to the young generation that they're finding it hard to buy new cars and rent apartments. Single-family dwellings are largely getting out of the reach of families."

"Their access to the good life is much more limited," said Allvine, who thinks young people are being victimized by inflation more than the older people, who got their start during the 50s and 60s and already have made their basic investments in life.

Teacher suspended for refusing papers

United Press International
DETROIT — A high school English teacher who calls herself "firm, but fair" has been suspended for 10 days without pay for refusing to accept overdue term papers from four students.

Lillie Mann, a 12-year veteran who teaches at Mackenzie High School, said she will appeal Tuesday's Detroit Board of Education ruling to the State Teacher Tenure Commission.

"Firm, but fair — yes," Mann said of her reputation among students. "I have a reputation around the school and the students are aware of it. They come into my class and they already know what I expect."

Last May, Mann refused to accept overdue research papers from four college-bound seniors. When ordered by Principal Cleon Gilliam to accept the papers and grade them, she gave each an "E — no credit" mark.
