Unity sought

Pope visits Moslem land, leaders

United Press International
ROME — Pope John Paul II left Wednesday for a three-day visit to Moslem Turkey on a mission aimed at achieving the "full and perfect unity of all Christians."

Before boarding the green and white papal Boeing 747 jet, the pope said his trip "represents a voyage of great hope" in healing the 925-year-old rift between Roman Catholicism and the separated Orthodox churches of the East.

John Paul, on the first visit in 12 years by a pope to the 98 percent Moslem country, said his trip is "another important step toward the full and perfect unity of all Christians."

"I am going in order to renew the efforts towards the unity of all Christians and to show the importance of the ecumenical patriarch," he said.

"I am going in order to renew the efforts towards the unity of all Christians and to show the importance of the Catholic Church gives to open dialogue with the venerable Orthodox churches," said Pope John Paul II.

ance the Catholic Church gives to open dialogue with the venerable Orthodox churches," said the pontiff.

"I am going to express my sincere affection and profound charity toward all those churches and their patriarchs and in particular toward the ecumenical patriarch," he said.

Though the 59-year-old pope planned extensive talks with President Fahri Koroturk and other Turkish political leaders in the capital, the highlight of his visit was the scheduled meeting with Greek Patriarch Dimitrios I, "first among equals" of the 14 Eastern Orthodox churches.

Massive security precautions were mounted around Turkey for the pope's visit.

John Paul said last week he was going to Turkey "in the spirit of re-establishing unity among Christians," specifically to mend the split between Roman Catholicism and the Orthodox churches that began in 1054 in a bitter dispute about papal

No survivors evident in Antarctic DC-10 crash

United Press International
WELLINGTON, New Zealand — A U.S. rescue helicopter crew reported it saw no signs of survivors Wednesday in the wreckage of an Air New Zealand DC-10 that crashed in the frozen Antarctic with 257 people aboard, including eight Americans.

New Zealand's Search and Rescue Headquarters said the helicopter carrying the rescue team was unable to land because of strong wind currents over the crash site on the slopes of Mt. Erebus. But a spokesman said the helicopter's crew said it saw no sign of survivors.

Another attempt to land was to be made Wednesday, a few hours after the first attempt, Search and Rescue Headquarters said.

New Zealand police said that in addition to the eight Americans — initial reports had said 12 — the plane was carrying 191 New Zealanders, 24 Japanese, one Australian, one Briton along with crew and other passengers — mostly tourists.

Antarctic experts thought it unlikely anyone could survive in the harsh, sub-zero temperatures where the plane went down.

The search for the tourist plane began early Wednesday when the aircraft was overdue on its return flight by several hours.

A Navy Hercules plane searching the frozen

Antarctic sighted the wreckage of the plane 2,500 up the slopes of an active volcano, Mt. Erebus, Ross Island, one of the peaks in the Antarctic region during tourist flights.

The Auckland rescue headquarters said two helicopters from the U.S. base at McMurdo immediately flew to the scene after the Navy plane found wreckage.

Oceanic Search Headquarters in Auckland said the black, burnt-out wreckage of the crash was on Mt. Erebus volcano, situated 25 miles north of McMurdo Station, the United States' main research base in Antarctica, on the shores of the Ross Sea.

U.S. Navy sources said wreckage was scattered over a 200-yard area.

The 12,520-ft. Mt. Erebus is the only active volcano in Antarctica. The cone-shaped volcano emits smoke or steam.

Because of low clouds, the Erebus peak could be seen at McMurdo although it normally can be seen from there.

Relatives of passengers crowded New Zealand's Christchurch airport where the plane had been to land.

An Air New Zealand spokesman said officials not immediately become alarmed when communications broke off with the plane because solar have caused communications problems recently.

Increase in energy funds

Soviets cut military budget

United Press International
MOSCOW — The Supreme Soviet convened Wednesday without ailing Premier Alexei Kosygin and unanimously passed a 1980 budget that calls for reduced military spending and increased energy exploration.

Kosygin, 75, has not been seen publicly since Oct. 18 and is widely believed to be recovering from a heart ailment.

President Leonid Brezhnev, 72, ruddy-faced despite persistent reports of his ailing health, sat through a 75-minute report by State Planning Minister Nikolai Baibakov detailing next year's economic targets, but did not reappear after a 20-minute recess to hear the budget reports of Finance Minister Vasily F. Garbuzov.

Garbuzov told members of the Soviet House of Deputies and the Soviet House of Nationalities, the two houses of the nation's rubber-stamp parliament sitting in joint session, that the 1980 budget provides for military spending amounting to $26.1 billion.

That sum represents 6 percent of the overall 1980 budget of $435.4 billion and is down from the 1979 military budget of $26.4 billion.

Western diplomats say, however, budget figures do not accurately reflect all Soviet military spending, which often is spread throughout the budget under non-military headings.

In his speech, Baibakov, the planning minister, announced a five-year plan for oil, coal, and resources, underscoring Brezhnev's warning Tuesday that constant must be the watchword of the

First Deputy Premier Nikolai Tikhonov, who was elected Tuesday to full membership of the Politburo, sat directly next to Brezhnev.

While the speeches drew to a close, the Kremlin Palace, spokeswoman said, Carr's lawyer, Tikhonov, analyst of scores who Murphy adopted in 1968, their record, The Cavalry, Bischoff with
