'Impossible' drill set for Aggie Band Saturday

By CAROL AUSTIN
Battalion Reporter

It's freezing cold, the sun has just about gone down, and the Aggie Band is still out there practicing.

"We won't get it perfect until Saturday, but we will have a perfect drill for the game," said James Dees, head drum major.

Dubbed "the impossible drill" a few years back after students ran the drill through a computer, it was promptly rejected on the premise that two people cannot be in the same place at the same time. At midfield, the band splits into two segments which cross diagonally with each other.

"It's accomplished by putting your foot through the stride of the man in front of you, the one you're crossing through," Dees said.

"It takes a lot of concentration," said Thierry Work, a freshman from Normandy, France.

A popular misconception is that the Band uses computers to plot its drills. Saturday's drill was drawn up by Dees.

"We're doing the impossible, plus. It's a cross-through with a new twist," Dees said.

The 252-member marching band will rely upon such staples as "the Aggie War Hymn," "Noblemen of Kyle," "Stars and Stripes Forever," and "Theme from Patton," familiar crowd pleasers.

There is an element of rivalry between the Fight-in Texas Aggie Band and the Texas band, billed as the Showband of the Southwest.

"Naturally, that's to be expected just because of who they are," said sophomore Rodney Kret.

A&M program teaches about sea

A handkerchief, dollar bill, pencil, sharp stick, rubber band, safety pin, piece of string, flat rock, key, paper clip, old buckle and book of matches — which could you use if you were shipwrecked?

Adults may need to give this some thought, but there are numbers of elementary school students who know immediately that these items can be survival tools. They learned from reading literature about the sea in a special program developed by Texas A&M University.

The elementary program, funded by the federal Sea Grant program and conducted by the Texas A&M Department of English, often provides young students with their first glimpse of the world of water while introducing them to sea-related literature.

The project is coordinated by David Stewart, head of the Department of English. Publications and classroom materials have been developed by Norma Bagnall, also of the Department of English.

"We are stressing sea awareness," Bagnall said. "At the same time we are recognizing the national re-emphasis on reading skills. The majority of people in the United States within 100 miles of an ocean one of the Great Lakes, yet children within this group have never experienced the ocean. Great Lakes first hand."

The first step of the program involved the compilation and publication of a bibliography of children's marine-related literature and information books entitled "Sea Sources." This list, pilot marine awareness lesson package developed and a room tested by Bagnall.

The package, for use in kindergarten through seventh grade, is based on eight books by nationally recognized authors. Bagnall's book will be available in time for the third phase of the program, the fifth annual Children's Literature of the Sea Seminar which will be Feb. 7-8, Texas A&M.

Truck deregulations could aid consumers

Deregulation of the trucking industry could mean lower consumer costs, says a Texas A&M University economics professor.

Dr. Thomas Saving said deregulation will force more competitive pricing and a wider variety of services. The industry will provide quick shipment for expensive products that companies don't want to warehouse. Slower shipment will be available for companies that can afford to store their stocks, he said. Companies will have to pay more for the faster service, but they will not have to pay the more expensive cost of warehousing a product, Saving said, adding that could mean an overall decrease in consumer product costs.

The conclusions are among the results of a study conducted by Saving for the National Science Foundation in which he tried to predict consequences of deregulating the trucking industry.

He predicted the outcome would be much like what happened in the airline industry when government recently took away its controls, Saving said, air travel is less for fares than before deregulation.

The study pointed out that regulations requiring truckers to operate on a first-come, first-serve basis through rate bureaus have had the inefficiency of the industry. Truckers do not fall under the trust laws and, therefore, are not subject to the same regulations as other industries.

Gunshot wound kills senior

Silver Taps to honor two Tuesday

Silver Taps for Neal W. Hahn, 22, and Douglas C. Wright, 23, Texas A&M University students, is tentatively set for Tuesday.

Hahn, an economics major, was found in his apartment Tuesday night. Peace Justice Mike Callihan issued a ruling of self-inflicted gunshot wound as cause of death.

is the tenth student fatality this semester.

Silver Taps will also be held for Wright, a Caldwell civil engineering major killed in a one-car accident Nov. 21.
