United Press International EL PASO — Amigoman, the internationally known symbol of this bicultural city, is going commercial. The city has decided to begin offering a new line of merchandise to retailers inscribed with Amigoman — a smiling sun wearing a Mexican sombrero and cowboy boots. The logo represents the blending of cultures of Mexico and the Western United States.

Robert L. Knight, acting director of the Convention and Visitor's Bureau, said the city intends to offer the Amigoman logo on "T-shirts, bowling balls, anything that will sell." In addition, Knight said Amigoman pins and patches, long popular with conventioneers, will begin bearing the name of El Paso and a registered trademark symbol.

Family saved by paper carrier

United Press International HOUSTON — Dave Nagel credits the man who delivers his morn-ing newspaper with waking him and his sleeping family and rescuing them from their burning home.

"We might still be sleeping if it wasn't for this man," Nagel said after Randall Harling banged on windows and doors to wake the family after he saw smoke from a roof vent and then a flash inside the house. Harling, 25, was on his route when he discovered the fire early Wednesday morning. He stopped to wake the family, woke the neigh-borhood in the process and then called the fire department. With the family awakened, Harling then called the fire department.

'Had the alarm been delayed just a few minutes, the roof would have busted through and embers would've spread with the wind onto the wood shingles of other houses," District 18 Fire Chief Rubin Puckett said.
