Senate may toughen laws on pot users

United Press International
WASHINGTON — A Senate committee may take a tougher stance on criminal penalties for marijuana use now that scientific experts say heavy pot smoking can affect the brain, lungs, heart and reproductive systems.

Sen. Charles Mathias, R-Md., said the two days of hearings on medical effects of the drug, which ended Thursday, will help the Judiciary Committee decide whether it needs to take another look at the marijuana provision in the criminal code reform bill it approved last year.

The legislation would reduce the penalty for possession of up to five ounces under federal jurisdiction from a one-year prison term and a $5,000 fine to only a $500 fine and no prison term.

Opponents of removing strong criminal penalties were bolstered by testimony from Mitchell Rosenthal, head of the Phoenix House Foundation, the nation's largest residential program for drug abusers.

He said he has changed his position from accepting decriminalization to opposing it after seeing its effects in New York, where he said nearly one-third of all seventh and eighth graders have pulled pot.

"If current trends continue — if the number of regular users and daily users continues to increase — then our nation is well on its way to acquiring an unmanageable number of emotionally or intellectually handicapped individuals," Rosenthal said.

William Pollin, director of the National Institute on Drug Abuse, said there are about 15 million regular marijuana users in the United States. He also said there are more cancer-causing agents in marijuana than in tobacco.

One of several parents scheduled to testify was Joe Hamilton — husband of actress Carol Burnett — who has had four of his 11 children addicted to drugs.

Two panels of scientists testified Wednesday that marijuana use can affect the human reproductive system, although more research is needed to pinpoint the possible harm.

U.S. Olympic boss rejects Carter boycott

United Press International
COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — The executive director of the United States Olympic Committee said Thursday the Carter administration has no authority to order an American boycott of the American Olympics and that he hoped to be able to tell that to the president himself.

F. Don Miller, who heads the huge U.S. Olympic operation, said even though members of the administration had indicated the United States might pull out of the Olympics this summer, none of those officials had contacted him.

In addition, Miller left open the possibility the U.S.O.C. might ignore any order by the president that this country not participate in the summer Games.

"It seems they have done their communicating through the media," said Miller. "Every day I read something new and it is like a bubble in a waterbed. You push it down here and it jumps up somewhere else."

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance said Tuesday that if the Soviet Union had not pulled its troops out of Afghanistan by mid-February the United States would not take part in the Olympics. On Wednesday press secretary Jody Powell said Carter shared Vance's view.

The international Olympic charter states that a nation's Olympic governing body, in this case the U.S.O.C., and not the political leader of a country makes decisions concerning a nation's participation in the games.

When asked whether he felt Carter was "butting in" on U.S.O.C. business, Miller replied:

"Yes."

Does he resent the president's actions?

"Let's say I regret it," said Miller. "I'm not angry but this raises a question in my mind of the lack of understanding about a worldwide movement that stands for international unity, peace and promoting good will in the use of the world."

QUALITY FIRST

BE ON THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS AT 22.

Think of a ship as a corporation, and it's not farfetched at all. A destroyer may have fifteen officers, other ships even fewer. Even the most junior officer gets to share in running the show.

You become part of the management team when you get your commission as an ensign after just 16 weeks of leadership training at Officer Candidate School.

Choose to be a Navy officer and you are responsible for people and equipment almost immediately.

Many officers go on for further advanced schooling. The Navy has literally dozens of fields for its officers — everything from nuclear propulsion to systems analysis, oceanography to inventory management. In graduate school, this training would cost you thousands, but in the Navy, we pay you.

Ask your Navy representative about officer opportunities, or mail this coupon for more information. Or call toll-free 800-841-8000 (in GA call toll-free 800-342-5855).

There's no obligation, and you'll learn about an excellent way to start a career in management. As a college graduate you can get management experience in any industry. But you'll get it sooner — and more of it — in the Navy.
