Free University to sign up students throughout week

By JON HEIDTKE
Campus Reporter

MSC-Free University will hold registration Tuesday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the Rudder Exhibit Hall for more than 40 mini-courses ranging from basic country western dance steps to white-water canoeing techniques.

Free University, which first came to Texas A&M in the early 1970s, was developed from a concept established during the mid-1960s at the University of California at Berkeley. It was originally called Freedom University.

The Freedom University system was based on a free exchange of knowledge and experience from those who wanted to share their information to those wanting to learn.

Freedom University, now known as Free U, has undergone changes in its short history. Originally its topics dealt with social and political issues, but now the majority of courses are associated with leisure time activities.

Free U's name is based on principles that the student is free to take any courses he chooses, but not feel pressured with tests or grades, said David Ruiz, vice-chairman of the MSC Free U Committee. But students think Free U means literally "free," and don't understand why costs are involved, said Ruiz.

"We receive no student service fees," said Ruiz, "therefore, we are self-supporting." Each student is charged a small registration fee which covers the cost of publicity, brochures, registration forms and handout material.

Free U has been expanding its courses every session — last semester almost 3,000 students participated — and this leads to some scheduling problems.

"Every room we have been allotted," said Randall Rychlik, scheduling chairman, "is now in use."

Registration will begin at 10 a.m. and will be handled on a first come, first served basis. Ruiz said that students interested in popular courses like bartending, country western dancing and powder puff mechanics should arrive early, because last semester these courses filled up in the first 45 minutes.

If a student can't register early, he can get a friend to sign him up. "Everybody can sign themselves up and one other person," said Ruiz, "but they have to pay on the spot."

Free U courses, which usually last about four to five weeks, are open to anyone in the Bryan-College Station area.

Students can sign up for as many courses as they have the money to pay for, Ruiz said.
