who lives in Navasota with his family, remembers Mance's life at home.

"Every night he'd get out on the porch and play the guitar, and we'd all start dancing," Ralph said.

One time on a field trip in school Ralph found out that his teacher didn't know who Mance Lipscomb was, so he told her.

"I told her my grandfather was the greatest guitar player."

Teacher, philosopher, musician or grandfather, those that knew him seemed to agree: Mance could really play the blues.
