Chocolate sales making a mint

United Press International

Chocolate candy prices aren't rising as fast or as high as gold — it only seems that way.

Boxed chocolates for $12-$30 a pound this Valentine's Day are no longer unusual.

One chocolatier, Thomas Kron, calls his plain one- and three-pound bricks "chocolate bullion" — with good reason. They are $9 and $25 apiece — plus postage, if you order by mail instead of visiting one of the company's shops in New York City or posh suburbs like Beverly Hills, Calif., or Bal Harbour, Fla.

More luxury chocolates have been sold during the past few months than ever before in the industry's history, says Don Gussow, chairman and editor in chief of Magazines for Industry.

Candy sales, including chocolates, are rising steadily, he said. He expects retail sales to reach $10 billion within a few years. Preliminary reports suggest they may have reached $5 billion last year.

"All of a sudden the new generation has discovered candy as part of their lifestyle," said Gussow.

Like some other old-timers in the industry, Gussow sounds somewhat shocked by the retail prices some companies get for their products.

"Five dollars a pound is absolutely right," he said. "You can't make better (chocolates) for any price."

"Anything beyond $5 a pound and you're paying for the name and fancy packaging," said Thomas J. Sullivan in a telephone interview from Glenview, Ill., where he is secretary and legal counsel for Retail Confectioners International. The group's 400 member companies operate a total of 15,000 directly owned retail candy shops worldwide. Some also distribute through drug and department stores.

"The average price in the United States of $4.50-$4.75 a pound (for boxed chocolates) is really good value as a gift," Sullivan said.

The most expensive chocolates to date, from the buyers' point of view, may well have been two 50-pound bars made by a Chicago company specializing in chocolates for fundraising. The bars were sold for a total of $13,275 at the New York Cocoa Exchange's 50th anniversary hospital.

Edmond Opler, board chairman of World's Finest Chocolate, Inc., the fund-raising business he runs every year. "Every school, every church needs money."

Consumers apparently have enough money to buy from companies like Kron Chocolate, a New York City-based manufacturer with nine shops nationwide. It gets $16-$25 a pound for boxed chocolates, hundreds of dollars in special orders such as a 15-pound, top-sized birthday "eating case" company made for a dress designer. The card cost $570 — mostly because of its handcarved message names.

Kron said another popular was made originally for the night cast party for "Charly" at the longrunning Broadway musical. It was a woman's leg with a garter — price, $60.

The boxed chocolates at Pearl Karp's Treat Boutique on Broadway theater district in New York City also command $12. That makes their Valentine's specialty — twin-decorated chocolate hearts weighing 45 grams and costing $250 — seem like a bargain on a price per pound about $5.55.

Karp estimated retail prices increased about 33 percent in the past two years.

He also said he plans to introduce life-size busts sculpted in chocolate. The special orders will have a month delivery date and cost $1,500. For 70 pounds of chocolate that's about $21.50 per pound — already sells life-size female busts (headless) for $50 each.

If this develops into a trend, we have X-rated candy stores.

"The candy market of the future may well be an adult market," he says.

Number aid banking woes

United Press International

WASHINGTON — A hot-line for consumer or civil matters in banking is now open to the public.

Irvine H. Sprague, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., says the hotline will give people a chance to ask questions, present their views and make complaints.

Sprague says it will help consumers learn their rights in these areas and broaden their general knowledge of banking. It will also help federal agency evaluate its handling of consumer protection statutes.

The toll-free number is (800) 5488. It is in daily service, Monday, Friday, 7:30 a.m.-4:15 p.m. CST.

Problems or questions involving specific banks should be directed to the consumer affairs specialist at the FDIC regional office in the area where the individual lives. The office for Texans is in Dallas.
