Prison finishes relocation

United Press International
SANTA FE, N.M. — Warden Jerry Griffin said Monday the major relocation of inmates in the aftermath of last week's uprising at the New Mexico State Penitentiary had been completed.

"We sent a total of 482 out of state, and we have 538 remaining here now," said Griffin. "At the present time we are not planning to take any more out of state. There may be some minor changes, but no more mass movement of prisoners."

The relocation of prisoners was required because of the devastation of the prison during the 36-hour uprising. Rampaging inmates set fire to the building, smashed windows and destroyed fixtures during the takeover — making much of the building uninhabitable.

Officials said 33 inmates died during the rioting — many of them tortured in grisly reprisal slayings. At least 89 persons were injured in the bloody uprising, some of them the 14 guards who were held hostage during the ordeal.

Clean-up operations continued inside the prison, Griffin said.

"We are trying to get things back to near normal," he said. "The kitchen is pretty well cleaned up now, but we have to run stress tests to see if it was badly damaged by fire."

Since the uprising, inmates have been fed from makeshift kitchens operated by the National Guard.

Griffin said three of the least damaged cellblocks, five dormitories and the prison hospital were being used to quarter the inmates while cleanup continues.

In the Legislature, the Senate got its first look Monday at Gov. Bruce King's plan to reconstruct the prison and build a new 500-bed maximum security prison adjacent to it. The measure — appropriating a total $82.5 million — won unanimous approval in the House Sunday.

Lawmakers debating the bill were reluctant to lay blame for the uprising.

"There is a lot of talk about blame," said Rep. Russell Autrey. "But this is not the time for laying blame on anyone."

"Right now, the most important thing is to deal with the aftermath of this tragedy."

Investigators returned to the prison Monday to seek more evidence and interview additional inmates who may become witnesses in the trial of instigators of the riot.

Assistant District Attorney Dick Baker said he was not certain how soon the cases would be prepared for presentation to a grand jury.

"Our cases will be carefully and diligently prepared," Baker said. "We are going to take our time and do it right."

Scientists cultivate 'super shrimp' crop

United Press International
PECAN ISLAND, La. — At the sprawling Rockefeller Wildlife Refuge in southwest Louisiana's coastal marshland, where scientists have been working for several years on "Super Gators," a new animal is undergoing study — a Super Shrimp.

The shrimp, actually the giant Malaysian freshwater prawn, (Macrobrachium rosenbergii), holds potential in a few years as a crop that could provide a secondary income for Louisiana farmers and a secondary source of seafood for shrimp lovers around the state and the nation.

There are, officials stress, a lot of ifs.

But experiments will continue this year on freshwater pond cultivation of the prawn, which can grow to one-quarter pound in tropical climates. They taste sweet, something like lobster.

"I know for sure that it can be grown in the state," said fisheries biologist Guthrie Perry, who has been conducting experiments for the Louisiana Wildlife and Fisheries Department.

"A landowner that would want to try to raise them for recreational value, with no real profit motive, could raise them (now) with no real problem," he said. "We have by no means found that commercial production would be economically feasible to attempt in Louisiana. I think in the next two or three years we'll know where we're going."

Perry conducted experiments on the prawns in 12 freshwater ponds on the refuge last summer, without feeding the shrimp, to determine stocking requirements and growth patterns. He plans to conduct similar experiments this summer, based on last year's results.

At Louisiana State University and Southern University in Baton Rouge, scientists James W. Avault Jr. and Jay V. Huner are also experimenting with the prawns in ponds, checking their growth patterns when fed.

Roadblocks to commercial production include the necessity of importing the shrimp larvae, maintains critical water temperature zones development of proper feeding regimens and stocking plans and procedures for harvesting the shrimp.

Perry said they might eventually make a good crop to be cultured along with crawfish or catfish ponds and might even be produced in rice fields.

"Catfish farming is already lucrative, and something like this could be equally successful," said H. Pierce of Battistella Sea Foods, large dealer in New Orleans.

"Freshwater shrimp culture will never replace the Gulf shrimp fisherman," he said. "Instead, there's a definite need for something to take the pressure off them. Shrimp catches are going down and demand is going up."

In Huner's experiment at Southern University last year, shrimp yields reached 400 pounds or $1,200 an acre. A good crawfish pond might yield 1,000 pounds, but because crawfish are cheaper, the value would be only $600.

"It's like raising tomatoes — you always do better the second year," Huner said.

A fine pickle for laws

United Press International
ST. LOUIS — William R. Moore says the best way to reduce the flood of federal laws and regulations is for Congress to pass his "Proposition Pickle."

Simply stated, Moore says the proposition requires that for every new law enacted, three other laws must be repealed.

Moore, executive vice president of Pickle Packers International, explained his proposition in remarks prepared for a meeting of the National Food Processors Association.

"Congress in the past three years has passed a total of about 821 public laws," he told the group. "Based on our proposition, that would have resulted in the repeal of 2,463 old laws."

Florida prosecutors say they denied killer's bargain

United Press International
ORLANDO, Fla. — State prosecutors have revealed that Theodore Bundy was ready at one time to plead guilty to three sex murders in exchange for 75 years in prison with no parole.

Instead the law school dropout now faces two death penalties for the deaths of two Florida State students and may receive a third sentence to Florida's electric chair for the death of a 12-year-old girl.

It was Bundy's constant complaints about his legal counsel that persuaded state prosecutors to reject a complicated plea bargaining agreement that would have put Bundy, 33, in jail for at least 75 years.

Bundy's plea bargaining attempt was made public by prosecutors Bob Dekle and Jerry Blair. They had just been released from a judicial gag order after a jury Saturday recommended Bundy be sentenced to death for the murder of Kimberly Diane Leach, 12.

Circuit Judge Wallace M. Jopling, who is not bound by the jury's recommendation of the death penalty, is to sentence Bundy today.

Dekle and Blair told reporters

Bundy had come to court last Monday carrying a signed legal document acknowledging guilt for the murders of the Lake City girl and Florida State University students Margie Bowman and Lisa Levy two years ago.

Dekle said Bundy spent much of the hearing complaining about his legal counsel, and he decided Bundy was laying the groundwork for a later appeal that would claim that Michael Minerva — his public defender — coerced him into pleading guilty.

"That was when I decided I could pull the switch — a feeling I have this day," said Blair.
