Abused boy escapes family campus

United Press International
LOS ANGELES — Police say a 9-year-old boy, who had been routinely chained to his bed and beaten by his father and brother for the last three years, escaped from his family with the help of other neighborhood youngsters.
The boy, identified by police only as Lonnie, was in protective custody at Morningside Hospital and doctors told police the youngster had 3-year-old scars on his back, arms and legs.
Police said the boy's father and his 20-year-old brother were arrested and a third suspect, reportedly the boy's mother, was being sought.
Sgt. Edward Lavin said the boy had been chained to a bed during the day and at other times he was chained and locked in a garage by his father and brother.

Contest: $100 prize

By JED T. YOUNG
Campus Reporter
Pi Sigma Alpha, the political science honor fraternity at Texas A&M University, is sponsoring a writing competition with a $100 prize for the first place paper.
Pi Sigma Alpha, which began last year, is attempting to turn the paper competition into an annual event at Texas A&M. The society is looking for papers that have political or institutional topics.
The papers will be judged by three faculty members of the political science department, Drs. Robert Bernstein, Richard Bensen and Warren Dixon. Steve Ellis, chairman of the paper committee for Pi Sigma Alpha, said the papers will first be sorted by members of the honors society in order to eliminate the ones that seem inappropriate as far as quality and topics.

In order to qualify, Ellis said, the paper should be written by a student and be on "some sort of political, systematic and scientific analysis of political activities or theories."
Pi Sigma Alpha is sponsoring the contest in order to encourage academic activities, especially for undergraduate political science majors, and to try to develop an interest in writing good papers, said Ellis.
Ellis said professors may also nominate papers they feel will be good papers for the competition and the honor society will try to contact the authors of those papers and encourage them to enter the contest.

Although the first place paper is the only one which will win a cash prize, the writers of the second and third place papers will receive certificates of recognition.
The awards will be presented April 14 at the Pi Sigma Alpha banquet, along with the presentation of the new honor society members.
The deadline to submit entries is March 21 at 5 p.m. Papers should be turned in in 130 Bolton Hall.
