Reborn parts save money

United Press International
DETROIT — Harry A. Holzasser is the evangelist of the automotive aftermarket.

When he speaks of being born again, he is not talking about souls. Holzasser is talking about starters, alternators, clutches and water pumps.

Holzasser, the president of Arrow Automotive Industries, the nation's leading parts remanufacturing firm, believes it makes increasing sense to use reborn parts with every increase in the rate of inflation or the price of cars and energy.

He predicts the 1980s will bring a revolution in the $50 billion industry that services cars after they leave dealer showrooms.

"By the end of the decade, I believe remanufactured parts will play the central role in the automotive aftermarket," he said.

Remanufacturing accounts for about 10 percent of the aftermarket, he said, or $5 billion in sales.

Holzasser said there is an ingrained prejudice against rebuilt parts in today's throwaway society — a suspicion they are not as good as new.

"The facts prove differently," he said.

"The consumer thinks back to the days of the junk yard — when it was just a clean-up, paint-up product. In many cases today we build it better than new."

Holzasser said the term "rebuild" doesn't do justice to the high technology, quality-controlled assembly line operations of the large scale remanufacturer.

Many people are unaware that when they buy a starter for their car it most likely will be a remanufactured one, he said. Repairs, he added, "would be embarrassed to charge you what it costs to buy a new one."

Arrow, headquartered in Hudson,

Mass., had sales of $72.2 million in 1979, more than double the $33.8 million of 1978. Holzasser expects the trend to continue.

"Economic conditions now make it very important for the car owner to save money and get a reliable part," he said.

There can be a substantial energy savings, for one.

Remanufacturing shortens the process of melting down and casting large metal components, just makes good sense to replace that large part and replace what is wrong inside," he said.

Arrow has estimated that 10 million water pumps remanufactured by the industry last year saved enough oil to heat 1,600,000 homes for a year.

Purchase price savings averaged 50 percent. Holzasser said.

He gives these cost comparisons: new alternator $49, remanufactured $37; new water pump $57, remanufactured $33.

That could be particularly important for foreign car owners who on the initial purchase price pay premium dollars for parts, he said.

Another reason for his optimism that cars are staying on the road longer, so there will be a need for replacement parts.

Arrow, started by Holzasser's father who began rebuilding auto armatures for local car repair shops, celebrated its 50th anniversary last year.

Holzasser is deeply involved in programs to foster the training of automotive mechanics and is campaigning not only in the auto industry, but among consumer goods sources generally, for part design allows for remanufacturing.

"It just seems a crime to throw away a refrigerator when the compressor's gone," he said.

Afghan ruler OKs conference

United Press International
Soviet-backed President Babrak Karmal of Afghanistan said he is willing to participate in an international conference to set up a police force that would patrol the tense border between Pakistan and Afghanistan as a step towards a Soviet withdrawal, a pro-Communist Indian newspaper reported Thursday.

The Afghan president, who was installed by the Soviet Union following its invasion of Afghanistan last December, was quoted as saying Soviet troops in his country will be withdrawn only when Pakistan guarantees it will stop what he said were its efforts to topple his government.

In an interview with the pro-Soviet Indian newspaper, Karmal said he would like to see a time launch a spring offensive against American help, then "Afghanistan will become the graveyard of imperialism."

He charged that the CIA plan to dismember Afghanistan, along its eastern and southern borders with Pakistan, the north to China and west to unnamed other nations.

"Their (the CIA's) whole idea was to turn Afghanistan into a Soviet base after they lost oil from Iran," Karmal said.

Asked if his government is interested in a conference of the countries involved in the crisis to discuss an agreed force to police the Afghan/Pakistan frontier, Karmal replied: "We say yes to any initiative."

"Any such arrangement, however, be in conformity with U.N. Charter that there should be the slightest meddling in our internal affairs," Karmal added.
