Carter must decide where to slash budget

United Press International WASHINGTON — President Carter is involved in the tough decisions on where to slash funds in his anti-inflationary balanced budget for the 1981 fiscal year, aides said. "We're in the process of putting together a revised budget and working as fast as we can," press secretary Jody Powell told reporters. "We're going to submit it as rapidly as we can," he said. "We're just now sitting down with agency heads to decide dollar for dollar."

Powell said he had no definite timing for the new budget to go to Congress. The level of cuts has already been studied with agency heads, but the painful process of actual spending reductions is yet to come.

"Every state is going to get hurt," Powell said. "We're going to try to be as fair as we can," he said. "Each is going to be faced with difficulty."

Carter said Monday his anti-inflation program is "bitter medicine" that must be shared by all sectors. He said he will weigh possible tax cuts once it is certain the 1981 budget will be balanced.

"There will be less federal aid for the cities," he said.

In addressing a congressional conference of the National League of Cities, he defended his proposed $13 billion in 1981 budget cuts as crucial to halting a skyrocketing inflation that "threatens to rage out of control."

"When I make absolutely sure the 1981 budget will indeed be balanced, and I am sure this will be accomplished, I will then, and only then, consider tax reductions, further to increase savings, to stimulate productivity and to lead increased business investment," the president said.

"Now is a time for discipline — for all of us — and not a time for promises for politics as usual."

After an extensive review of administration economic policies, Carter said, "In the end, there is no sugarcoating this pill. This is strong medicine. It is bitter medicine."

"There will be less federal aid for cities," he told the group. "Everyone must share in this common effort."

FBI may probe medical schemes

The Los Angeles Times reported Tuesday that the FBI investigated as many as 170 medical laboratories.

Medical cases in Southern California and expected indictments of at least 15 to 30 suspects in the next six months.

NBC correspondent said Monday that the FBI "certainly there will be convictions, and they will cover investigation, just on the surface."

Paralyzed girl wins suit for $2.1 million

United Press International PROVIDENCE, R.I. — A judge ordered the federal government to pay $2.1 million to a California girl, left paralyzed and retarded for life because of negligent treatment by a Navy doctor in Philadelphia in 1972.

U.S. District Chief Judge Raymond Pettine's award to Karla Foskey and her family was believed to be the largest damage award in a personal injury case in state history.
