

Civil defense plans discussed

By KATHLEEN HARTNEY

Officials from Brazos County and three surrounding counties met with state nuclear civil protection planners Wednesday at the Brazos Center to discuss relocation plans in the case of a nuclear attack.

One of the planners, William G. Dourte, said the pilot program began six years ago to assist local governments in the development of nuclear civil protection plans.

The U.S. Defense Department said crisis relocation is essentially the pre-planned movement of people from certain designated high risk areas to safer locations called host areas.

Host areas are defined as areas where the likelihood of nuclear devastation is low.

The Defense Department has designated Bryan-College Station as a high risk area because its population exceeds 50,000.

Dourte said there are 33 high risk areas in Texas designated as such because they have a military base or installation, a complex of nationally essential business and industry or a large population concentration.

A release from State Nuclear Civil Protection Planning Director Frank T. Cox said the relocation program has five phases and local officials need to develop a plan to handle all phases.

The first phase, pre-crisis consideration, calls for the development of new plans or the evaluation of existing ones.

Brazos County Civil Defense Director Jake Canglose said an "on-shelf" crisis relocation plan for Bryan-College Station, which includes rural parts of Brazos and Burleson counties, has been developed and will be released to the public when the state feels it is needed.

The plan divides the area into three sections. Surrounding Burleson, Robertson and Grimes counties are to be used as host areas for the residents of each section.

According to the plan, relocation would be initiated by state governors at the request of the president and should be accomplished in three days.

The release said the increased readiness phase, to be enacted at the authorization of the state civil defense director, requires the host and risk areas to start coordination of activities which will involve preparations for the next phase.

The movement phase starts when the president orders evacuation of high risk areas.

The main considerations for this phase are public information and traffic control in the risk areas; traffic control, registration and lodging in the host areas.

The fourth phase, the relocation, deals with activities necessary for the support of the relocated residents in the risk and host areas.

Food and shelter for people in the host areas and maintenance of essential services and industry in the risk areas need to be dealt with, according to the plan.

The release called for the shelter phase to be enacted when a nuclear attack actually occurs.

Dourte said this program is to be used only when probability of nuclear attack is imminent.

Corps announces 12 more leaders

Major unit commanders and Corps Staff seniors for Texas A&M University's 1980-81 Corps of Cadets have been announced.

The four major unit commanders are Bill Jones of Caldwell, First Brigade commander; Brian Hearnberger of Tyler, First Regiment commander; Mark Kirkpatrick of Post, First Wing commander; and Cullen Schiffrin of San Antonio, Aggie Band commander.

The four will join Corps Commander Ken Cross and Deputy Corps Commander David Rencurrel in commanding the various units of the 1,800-man Corps.

The Corps is divided into three major units, each composed of cadets of primarily one service branch, and the tri-service Aggie Band. Each major unit commander will hold the rank of cadet colonel.

Joining Cross and Rencurrel on the Corps Staff will be cadet lieutenant colonels Tracy Cox of Dallas, Roy Brantley of Belton, Blake Purcell of Fort Worth, Tom Langford of Dallas, Tom Wilson of Alvin, Max Lindig of Hye, Tom Jumper of San Antonio, and Philip Greilich of Dallas.

Ags aid Mother Earth

For the next month Aggies will have a chance to do Mother Earth a favor by saving aluminum cans.

The Wildlife Society is collecting the cans for recycling in connection with Earth Day '80, April 22.

Peyton Hughes, Earth Day organizer for Texas A&M University, said money from the cans will go to national organizations such as the Sierra Club, National Wildlife Federation, Save the Whales and other environmental societies.

Parking Lot 49, near the Grove, is the collection site for the cans, but stations will be set up near soft-drink machines on campus.

Hughes is hoping to pattern Earth

Day '80 after Earth Day '70, which stressed the need for pollution control.

"This day is in celebration of the environmental accomplishments made in the last 10 years," Hughes said. "Also, it is to spur another conscious interest in the environment."

The Putoma Corp., of Fort Worth, will pick up the cans and pay the club 35 cents a pound. There are approximately 24 cans per pound. The company estimates a minimum profit of $1,400, based on what a high school can collect.

Any clubs with ideas for celebrating Earth Day should contact Hughes at 696-2845.
