mother, who after eight years will finally be able to re-enter the main-stream of life," said the family's attorney, Mark Mandell.

When Karla was 1, her mother became concerned about her slow development. She took her from their home in Delaware to the Philadelphia Naval Hospital in 1972 where she was examined by Dr. Harvey J.

Several doctors testified during the non-jury trial before Chief U.S. District Judge Raymond Pettine Danits had failed to give Karla stan-dard neurological tests that would have shown she had a seizure disorder. He also failed to give her drugs to control the seizures, they In August 1972 Karla suffered a had been mildly retarded before the seizure occurred.

In his ruling Tuesday, Pettine said Danits "failed to provide a reasonable standard of care" for the girl.
He noted Karla still has frequent convulsions and has the mental capacity of 1-year-old. "She has life but does not live,"

Pettine said. He awarded Karla $68,000 for loss of earning capacity; $1.3 million for future medical care, including round-the-clock nursing care; $6,000 for medical equipment; $32,000 for past expenses incurred by the family and $700,000 for pain and suf-

United Press International LAS VEGAS, Nev. — A nurse suspended from her job because of a police inquiry into possible mercy killings in a respiratory intensive care unit of Sunrise Hospital, has denied any wrongdoing.

Jani Adams, 32, was among six employees suspended when the investigation became public. Sources said the police are investigating reports that a nurse, nick-"Death's Angel," tampered with life support systems on critically ill patients.

The investigation began early this onth after a nurse told police she overheard a conversation in which two employees predicted a specific patient would fall victim to "Death's Angel" that night.

The police informant said the patient died on the given day, adding she was told some employees in the intensive care unit had wagered bets on the time a patient would die.

Bus troubles slow plans

United Press International CLEVELAND — The rear window of a school bus, empty of chil-dren, was shattered Wednesday by either a pellet gun or rock on the first day of stepped-up desegregation in Ohio's largest public school district. A school board spokesman said the woman driver and a school monitor on the bus were not hurt.

In addition, school oficials said many buses broke down, were late and in some cases did not even show up at designated pick-up sites, further hobbling the city's racial busing

The Cleveland Board of Education had planned to buy 125 extra buses from International Harvester Corp., but a strike there forced the board to lease used vehicles, of which as many as 50 did not meet state standards.

Cleveland began a racial balancing program last fall, busing about 8,500 students in an effort to desegregate one-fourth of the 94,000-pupil

The second step will mean busing 11,000 additional students
