Strong performances highlight 'Show Boat'

By BECKY SWANSON

"Show Boat" was truly entertaining. A combination of drama, comedy, dancing and a delightful musical score provided an enchanting even-

Clements: Ford has no chance

AUSTIN — Former President Gerald Ford would not have received any Texas support and would have divided the Republican Party had he chosen to run for the presidency, Gov. Bill Clements said Thursday.

During his weekly news conference the governor said he had been asked by the former president's supporters for his opinion on Ford's possible attempt at the presidency.

Clements said he had two reasons for recommending Ford not run. "I told him he had no way of getting on the Texas ballot, and no chance of getting any Texas delegates," Clements said.

Feb. 4 was the deadline for presidential candidates to qualify for the May 3 Texas primary.

The governor also said the Republican Party would have been divided if Ford had chosen to run.

Clements denied media reports that former Gov. John Connally had been instrumental in helping him persuade Ford not to run.

Clements also said he thinks any Republican who gets the nomination can win in November.

"Mr. Carter will be in deep trouble by mid-summer when all his chickens come home to roost," Clements said Carter's foreign and economic policies have begun to collapse and the president could be in grave danger in the next few months.

Clements said he only plans to campaign in the state for the Republican presidential candidate.

ing for a sellout crowd at Rudder Auditorium Thursday night.

Despite audio problems that garbled the first scene, the performance went well.

Forrest Tucker was excellent as Cap'n Andy, the captain of the "Cotton Blossom," a showboat playing the Mississippi in the 1880s.

The story revolved around the romance of Cap'n Andy's daughter, Magnolia (played by Pamela Kalt), and Gaylord Ravenal (Tom McKinney), a riverboat gambler, as they fall in love, get married and go to Chicago, only to split when he leaves because of his failure as a gambler.

Finally, they are reunited on the "Cotton Blossom" for a happy ending.

McKinney was enchanting as Ravenal. His voice was strong and clear and he made a dashing entrance that captured more hearts than that of Magnolia.

In their first song, "Only Make Believe," Kalt started out weak and was drowned out by the orchestra — a problem that recurred at times during the show. The orchestra was often too loud, causing difficulty in understanding some of the lyrics in the songs.

One of the high points of the play was the rendition of "Ol' Man River," sung by Joe (Robert Mosley), an old black riverboat hand. The lyrics of the song capture the feelings of depression and helplessness experienced by blacks of the era. Mosley's resonant bass voice carried deep feeling and meaning into the lyrics.

Joe's wife, Queenie (Butterfly McQueen), was hilarious. Her cackling laughter and unique bustling movements were amusing in themselves, but she also put on a good performance.

Julie (Adrienne Angel), the tragic mulatto show boat actress, personifies long suffering and sacrifice. Her performance was believable and her song "Bill" showed that she was still capable of love and understanding even though it seemed she had no friends left at all. Angel's singing of this number was enough to picture the man she loved as she sang.

Cap'n Andy's wife, Parthy (Jean Bruno), is the classic over-protective, meddling mother. Cap'n Andy makes light of her constant nagging and worrying, providing some of the play's lighter moments.

The performance was well staged, and the scene changes were executed quickly by means of well-designed rolling sets.

The costumes were appropriate, enhancing the appeal of the story with colors to match the mood of the scene; drab colors for the more somber scenes and bright colors for the song-and-dance routines.
