

Trout like to wait for food, Penn State researcher says

United Press International UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. — A Penn State researcher who, armed with a micro-computer and binoculars, spent more than 1,500 hours knee-deep in mud, has found that trout insist on comfort for their dining pleasure.

Robert Bachman, a doctoral candidate in ecology, hid from hungry fish behind a burlap covered "trout blind" for three years, he said. His main finding was that trout prefer to wait for food to drift on by, rather than initiate a search.

"Fish know the spots in the stream where they can expend the least amount of energy while waiting for food," Bachman said. "I call these spots 'seats in the restaurant.' The more seats, the more trout."

But, like gourmets who have patiently withstood countless greasy spoons featuring abrupt waiters, slipshod service and outrageous bills, native fish are not willing to share their finds with invading tourists — hatchery fish placed in their locale.

It's not easy.

"The dominant wild fish — the biggest and the toughest — are the ones that fight the stocked trout," Bachman said. "But in doing so they become worn out. I've seen wild trout on their sides, gasping from the exertion of the struggle."

"The wild fish know the spots in the stream where they expend the least energy; the stocked fish don't know the spots and must struggle against the stream or fight the wild fish for the good spots," Bachman said.

Cleveland hearings to begin

United Press International CLEVELAND — A judge, angry and frustrated by difficulties plaguing the school desegregation case, began hearings today to determine whether top-ranking school officials should be found in contempt for failing to follow court orders.

U.S. District Judge Frank J. Murphy, Jr., at the urging of NAACP attorneys, will start what is expected to be a lengthy set of hearings on the school system's compliance with court orders in key areas — from the basic competence of school officials to plan and carry out desegregation orders.

The court's review comes from the turmoil in the school system by two to three months. Major decisions on the desegregation program.

Lacking enough buses to transport a large number of pupils, school administrators proceeded with a desegregation program in several days of chaos.

Transit foul-ups left hundreds of pupils stranded at pick-up points across the city for hours at a time — some heavy rain and 30-40 mph winds.

The confusion continued five days, until the embattled school board of Education turned to the state superintendent of education, a nationally recognized expert on school busing, to appoint a director of transportation for the district and bring it under control, although the use of buses and drivers causing some bus scheduling problems.
