More citizens resist paying income taxes

United Press International
A growing number of Americans are refusing to file income tax forms or to pay Uncle Sam another penny. Most of us spend several months a year working for the federal government, but they've told the government "I quit."
While millions of Americans struggle through 1040 forms with an eye on the calendar, April 15 is just another spring day for the tax resisters. They say they have legally cut in half the adage about life's two unavoidable obstacles: death and taxes.
It's not known how many tax resisters will choose not to hand over a chunk of their salaries to the federal government this year. But their numbers seem to be increasing — or at least they have become more unabashed.

Non-filers say they are among strong and growing ranks, leading It's not known how many tax resisters will choose not to hand over a chunk of their salaries to the federal government this year. But their numbers seem to be increasing — or at least they have become more unabashed.

rebellion that was only in its infancy when California voters approved Proposition 13.

The U.S. Internal Revenue Service says it doesn't take seriously the notion of any burgeoning movement to reject the federal government's right to tax its citizens. An IRS spokesman conceded only that in the last few years "small but very vocal groups have made quite a bit of noise" around the country. It has won some court cases but so have several of the resisters.

Some people and organizations tout the nation with lectures about the government's inability to legally tax incomes, drawing audiences from Anchorage to Miami.

Non-filers take a variety of tactics to argue they have remained on legal footing. Most cite provisions of the U.S. Constitution, claiming tax forms or federal taxation itself violates the law of the land.

Perhaps the most popular course among tax resisters is to plead the Fifth Amendment. Some say that since information on tax forms is handed over to the U.S. Justice Department upon request, filing a 1040 form could provide self-incriminating evidence for prosecutors.
A group calling themselves "tax patriots" drew at least 200 people when it held a meeting March 4 in the Baltimore suburb of Catonsville, Md.

Charles Rielly, a former printer from Mesa, Ariz., who now lectures across the country, told the gathering to write "object-self incrimination" on each line of their 1040s.
He has done exactly that for a decade now. The government didn't like it and brought charges of willful violation to file. But last June 20 he was acquitted in U.S. District Court in Phoenix.

The 16th Amendment is another constitutional foundation for claims the government has no right to tax incomes.
Some groups, like the St. Louis Monetary Realists Society, take the view that a dollar isn't money at all but only a unit of measurement. They say since the dollar has no backing by gold, silver, or any other tangible thing, it is worthless.

The society says it doesn't endorse that idea as a legal basis for anyone to stop paying taxes and wouldn't advocate non-payment at all. But the group's president, Dr. Paul A. Hein Jr., hasn't filed a tax return since 1976 and his bank records were recently seized by federal authorities.

Still other non-filers strive for conventional tax shelters with unconventional methods. Many tax resisters have paid fees to become ordained mail-order ministers, transferring their earnings and possessions before claiming the tax-exempt status of a religious denomination.

The IRS in Indiana says many of the 169 cases it has identified as illegal tax protests throughout the state involve just that.
The "vow of poverty" strategy has led to mixed results. In Tustin, Calif., an organization called "Tea, An Association of American Patriots" says it will show anyone how to become an ordained minister of a mail-order church and become tax-exempt. A $1,250 initial fee is charged.

In meetings the group suggests listeners should establish a church of their own with $25 worth of legal documents mail-ordered from the Universal Life Church in Modesto, Calif.

And indeed, attorney Peter Stromer waged a successful court battle that won the church tax-exempt status in 1974.
About 230 residents in four New York towns in the Catskill Mountains same claim on his 1975 return received a similar verdict last year. Chrisman, an organic trucker who grows alfalfa sprouts, claimed his conscience as a pacifist prohibits him from paying killing, even indirectly, taxes to finance the military.

One man who is awaiting criminal trial on tax charges has vassed the nation to bring attention to his claims anyone can avoid all taxes.

Irwin Schiff, author, lecturer, talk-show guest, is an innuendo agent and publisher by profession. The Hamden, Conn., native paid taxes since 1973 and was anyone who will listen why.
Newspaper ads across the country have urged readers to attend lectures, promising a money guarantee if left unconvinced. "Learn why federal income taxes are illegal," advertisements say. Schiff's book portrays American economy devastated by federal bungling and a "Fix-Kit," consisting of step-by-step pamphlets and cassette recordings, $50.

Schiff, a lifelong Connecticut resident and the son of a cabinet maker, was convicted in U.S. District in Bridgeport, Conn., in Feb. 1979 for failure to file tax returns. But that decision was overturned by the U.S. 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals in New York which set a new trial.
