Cuba names skyjacker

United Press International
MIAMI — Radio Havana Thursday identified the hijacker of an American Airlines Boeing 727 as a 35-year-old man claiming to be a former dentistry student from Minneapolis who dropped out of the University of San Francisco last year.

The broadcast from Havana was monitored in Miami.

Radio Havana said the man's first name was Gerald. The last name was not completely intelligible but sounded like "Larmertin."

Radio Havana said, "He spoke fluently to the people of Cuba through the press. He abandoned the United States for political and religious reasons."

"He said any (black) leader who tried to show the right road to the black people was exposed to death."

"In the U.S., black people live without hope," the broadcast said. The broadcast quoted the man as saying he abandoned his studies at the university last year because of troubles with university authorities.
