AT LAST, AN ACCOUNT OF WATERGATE BY SOMEONE WITH NOTHING TO COVER UP.

Nixon, Haldeman and Erlichman have all told their tales. Now, Judge John Sirica in TO SET THE RECORD STRAIGHT, has written his revealing no-holds barred, personal account of Watergate from a unique vantage point — behind the bench.

"What he couldn't stomach was hypocrisy, the smug assumption that justice was somehow different for the powerful... He wanted the truth and ultimately he got it!"

Rhodesia greets prince

United Press International
SALISBURY, Rhodesia — A young mulatto girl stretched across a fence to give Prince Charles a quick kiss on the cheek Wednesday upon his arrival to turn Africa's last white colony into an independent Zimbabwe under black majority rule.

The young woman was among about 5,000 people crowded along the walls of the city hall grounds to catch a glimpse of the 31-year-old bachelor at his first official stop.

As Charles walked along the wall shaking the outstretched hands, she thrust her head forward to give him a quick peck.

The prince's VC-10 jetliner's arrival touched off three days of hectic independence celebration.

Charles was met by President Canaan Banana, Prime Minister Robert Mugabe and a group of other military and civilian officials. Cannons boomed a 21-gun salute and a police band struck up Britain's national anthem, "God Save The Queen," as four Hawker Hunter jet fighter-bombers zoomed overhead.

Schoolchildren and African women in traditional dress waved flags on the balconies.

The prince's arrival was greeted gleefully by the nation's majority blacks, but the response from the white community surrendering power varied from enthusiasm to open bitterness. Policewoman Pauline Clark, who was assigned to the city hall, gave voice to the latter view.

"I am only here because I have to be," she said. "I am only here because of the contamination. It is not my fault."

Her attitude contrasted with that of 68-year-old Mrs. Leach, who spent three hours at the city hall waiting for a catch sight of the prince in his naval uniform.

"Charles, I love you," she said when he shook her hand. "You are gorgeous, just lovely. I will wash my hand again."

Red Brigades leader tells all

United Press International
TURIN, Italy — Breaking the Red Brigades' strict code of silence, a leader of the urban terrorist group has told police how the gang operates and confirmed it has intricate ties with the Palestinian guerrilla movement, police sources said Wednesday.

By allegedly making a 70-page "confession" to police, Fabrizio Peci has become a man marked for death.

Peci, 27, was arrested in Turin two months ago along with fellow gang members. He is accused of 39 separate crimes in connection with the kidnapping and assassination of former Premier Aldo Moro in 1978.

Police sources said Peci's alleged confession described the Moro killing in detail and revealed Red Brigades leader Mario Moretti, narrowly escaped arrest in a room suspected terrorists in France last month, was also involved.

Peci told police he and his group did not use any weapons, they said.

They said Peci also said he was used by Italian guerrillas in the Czech-made Skorpion machine gun used to kill Moro, obtained from Palestinian groups.

Peci's revelations to police were headed by anti-terrorist expert Carlo Alberto Dalla Chiesa and investigators, who thought Peci was only the head of the Turin group and not one of the gang's leaders, the sources said.

Cuban refugees leave embassy

United Press International
SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — Two hundred fifty Cubans screaming "freedom, freedom, freedom," landed in San Jose Wednesday in the first part of an air evacuation of 10,800 refugees held up in the Peruvian embassy in Havana.

The refugees were forced to run a gauntlet of about 300 pro-Castro Cubans who shoved them, screamed obscenities and punched at least two of them as they left the Peruvian mission, Costa Rican officials said.

"Viva Costa Rica," the Cubans shouted as 152 of them stepped off a gleaming Boeing 727 and, one hour later, 98 others arrived aboard a BAC 111 jetliner.

Carlos Aguilar, a Costa Rican cabinet member who went to Havana to pick up the first group of refugees, said the scene outside the Peruvian embassy was so chaotic he never had to go in again.

About 300 supporters of President Fidel Castro lined either side of the street and the refugees and shouted such as "worms" (gusanos) as they walked to buses that took them to the airport, he said.

Juan Alberto Rodriguez, a police officer who punched him in the nose, "Castro followers helped by police" punched him to the ground in the gauntlet run. Another man refused to give his name, said he punched on the nose.
