15 faculty, staff members win highest A&M awards

Fifteen Texas A&M University faculty and staff members honored Thursday by the Association of Former Students with presentation of Distinguished Achievement Awards, the most prestigious citations given on campus.

Association of Former Students President Raul B. Fernandez of San Antonio presented the awards at the University's annual spring faculty meeting. Checks for $1,000, along with commemorative watches and plaques, were given to each award winner.

Awards for teaching went to R.J.Q. Adams, associate professor of history; Donald R. Fraser, professor of finance; John M. Logan, professor of geology and geophysics; Jane M. Magill, assistant professor of biochemistry and biophysics; Arnold Vedlitz, associate professor of political science; and David G. Woodcock, professor of architecture.

Research awards were presented to Guy L. Curry, associate professor of industrial engineering; Duane C. Kraemer, professor of veterinary physiology and pharmacology and animal science; and Charles J. Scifres, professor of range science.

Awards for individual student relationships went to Imadel Bachus, administrative assistant in biomedical science; and James K. Hennigan, associate professor of industrial engineering.

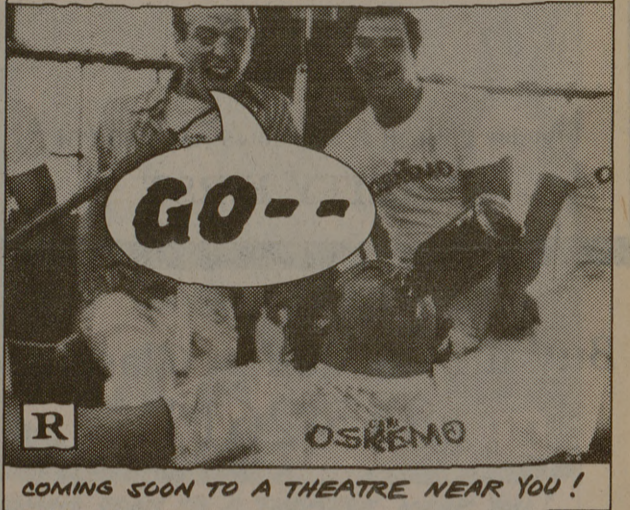

Wesley A. Donaldson, director of purchasing and stores; and Claude B. Goswick, student health center director, were presented administration-staff awards. Archie I. Flowers, professor of veterinary public health, and Bob J. Ragsdale, project leader in range science with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, were given awards in the continuing education/extension category.

Recipients were selected by a committee composed of faculty, students and former students.

Presnal speaks at breakfast; small-businessmen organize

by JED T. YOUNG

The most effective lobbyist is not the professional special interest group leader but the informed constituent, said state representative Bill Presnal.

Presnal spoke Thursday morning at the Chamber of Commerce breakfast held for Bryan-College Station small businessmen.

Presnal said the Legislature is much more informed than in the past but members are not familiar with all the bills that pass through the Texas senate and house.

"Around 5,000 bills are considered in the 140 day-sessions, and during that period of time, there is no way anyone can be thoroughly familiar with all those bills," he said. Presnal said there is a lot of legislation that constituents don't hear about, and about which the implications are not realized until much later — and it may be too late as far as our concerns.

"Businesses in trade need to sit down and exchange notes," as far as what is needed and wanted in the way of legislation in that particular industry or area of concern, he said. "I hope you realize that there is a need to bring a group such as this together," Presnal said, "to at least bring people with expertise to discuss problems more fully."

Presnal said that local businessmen should become involved because legislative action could very well have an impact on their businesses.

This group of area small businessmen is forming to help establish relations with the elected officials that represent them, said Steve Arden, committee chairman of small businessmen organization, a part of the Chamber of Commerce.

Arden said the group is planning additional breakfasts where other legislators, state and national representatives, and also heads of some of the commissions in Austin may come and speak.

The group wants to make information available to the small businessman about enacted legislation that will affect him, Arden said.

"We are going to establish a means for group action when it is appropriate or when it might be called for by one of our legislators," Arden continued.

Arden said that the chamber also wants to establish a businessman's forum where legislators can come and visit, and to encourage additional businesses to become involved with the legislative process itself.

"We can have a very active small businessmen's council," he said.

Allen Hanson, vice president of the Chamber of Commerce commercial division, said any businessman is invited to become a member of the chamber, and to become involved in the small businessmen council. All they need to do is get in touch with any commerce member or come by the Chamber of Commerce office 401 S. Washington Avenue in Bryan or write to P.O. Box 726 in Bryan.
