COLLAGE

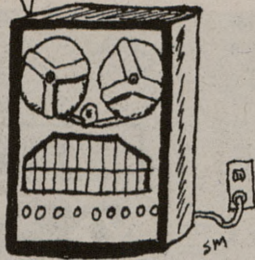

JACKSON, Miss — Reports of mothers attending college with their sons or daughters are no longer unusual, as many older women are returning to school.

But Sandra Garrott and her mother, Loretta, are taking the back-to-school-togetherness bit a little farther than most — they're dorm roommates at Millsaps College.

Sandra did make one request: "I just told her to act like a roommate, not a mother." Mrs. Garrott has promised not to impose a curfew or try to supervise her daughter's social life. She'll spend weekends at home with her husband.

THEY ALL LOOK ALIKE TO ME...

DEKALB, Ill. — Many papers around the country carried the account earlier this month of the Northern Illinois University professor who statistically predicted the winner of the Miss America pageant. But the professor is now complaining that a revised prediction, changing his choice from Miss Kansas to Miss Oklahoma, didn't get much media play.

Business professor George Miller got nationwide attention and was featured in People magazine when he announced his prediction before the pageant. But he changed his prediction when he learned Miss Oklahoma placed first in the preliminary talent contest.

His calls to the wire services and various radio stations apparently fell on deaf ears, though, and most people never learned of the revised prediction.

The professor feels he has learned something about both predicting the contest and dealing with the media. He says he'll make a few changes in his computer program — and his public relations plan — and try again next year.
