State / National Teacher group to back Carter

United Press International
 AUSTIN — The president of the Texas State Teachers Association said Wednesday President Carter clearly has a better record in education than Ronald Reagan and the teacher organization will support the incumbent.

"We're convinced that our members will make a difference in the upcoming election," said Dora Scott. "And we feel certain that our legislative package will get the support it needs next year."

Scott said TSTA also was endorsing 109 other candidates in Texas, but this was the first time the educator group has backed a presidential candidate.

She said the Texas Educators Political Action Committee, TSTA's political arm, had decided to endorse Carter in October 1979 and that decision was reaffirmed in September.

"Our support for the Carter-Mondale ticket and the 109 other candidates around Texas is a logical outgrowth of TSTA's longtime participation in politics," Scott said. "We know that political participation is the only way to lay a foundation for the betterment of teachers' professional lives."

Scott also said President Carter had kept a 1976 campaign promise to create a cabinet-level Department of Education, while Reagan proposes to abolish the office if elected.

The TSTA president said the organization also was pushing a four-point legislative program for the 1981 Legislature to consider when it convenes in January.

The program calls for a 33 percent increase for teacher salaries, due process and fair dismissal procedures for public school employees, group health insurance which would be similar to that provided other state employees and collective bargaining rights for teachers.

"We feel that we are within sight of winning on all counts," Scott said. "We have these positive feelings even though our collective bargaining proposal has already been judged and threatened with a Gov. (Bill) Clements before we have a chance to give it a hearing."

Scott said TSTA members work to get Carter and the other candidates the group endorsed. She said the teacher organization would mount door-to-door canvasses and set up telephone banks.

"By backing pro-education candidates, we're supporting the best of the country. We invite all to join with us in our cause," she

Use of penicillin might aid infants

United Press International
 BOSTON — Penicillin given to babies within an hour after birth may reduce the incidence of serious infections but might open the door for other bacterial diseases resistant to the antibiotic, doctors reported Wednesday.

A two-year study of 18,738 infants found strong indications that penicillin reduces "Group B streptococcal" infections, which occur up to three of every 1,000 live births and are fatal about 50 percent of the time.

Researchers at the University of Texas Health Science Center, Dallas said they are continuing the study to determine whether it can prevent the infections without unleashing a Pandora's Box of other diseases.

Chief Investigator Jane Siegel said penicillin reduced Group B streptococcal infections and did not increase other diseases during one year of the study reported this week in the New England Journal of Medicine.

But she pointed out that during the team's first year of research, the treatment increased the appearance of bacteria not affected by penicillin while it did very little to stop Group B infections.

In a telephone interview, Siegel conceded the results were contradictory and said doctors should proceed with caution.

"The message that we have is that penicillin may prevent the infection, but it should not be used on a wide basis at present because we have not ruled out that there is an adverse effect," she said.

She suggested penicillin could be used "as a temporary measure to prevent Group B streptococcal infections in a limited way," but not on a widespread basis.

"We certainly don't want to trade off one disease for another," she said.

Group B streptococcal infections can cause "early onset syndrome" which can occur in the first 24 hours of an infant's life, bringing with it respiratory distress or pneumonia. Babies may go into shock or develop meningitis.

Bacteria that are resistant to penicillin include Escherichia coli, normally harmless bacterium that occupies the human intestines. It can, however, cause infections that are especially hard to treat in infants.

Doctors were studying use of penicillin, Siegel said, because of the danger involved in Group B streptococcal diseases and the accidental discovery in 1975 that the antibiotic seemed to protect babies from the infections.
