'Old West' show opens

By LYDIA D. JOHNSON

Battalion Reporter

James Boren's favorite painting, at least of the ones he's painted himself, is "Lifetime Cowboy." It is a portrait of an old timer he knew, whose sensitivity he said he can actually feel.

Texas Artist James Boren is one of the artists who appeared in Rudder Tower last week to promote the display "The Cowboy and the New West."

Boren said he began his career as an artist while very young. "You know how children are. They have tendency to try and copy everything they see, and that's what I did," Boren said.

Immediately after Boren graduated from high school in Temple, World War II began, he said, and art school had to wait to 6 years.

Deciding what to paint isn't easy, Boren said.

"I do an awful lot of traveling and looking for subject matter," he said, "and I visit a lot of modern day ranches.

"There are still a lot of modern day ranches where they even run the chuck wagon and round up cattle in the spring and fall.

"I go through Arizona, Mexico and Colorado seeking out things to draw."

The decision of which colors to use to achieve the total effect isn't a matter of trial and error, Boren said.

"To begin with, the subject matter determines what colors are to be used. Secondly, you have to use good color schemes. You have to know which colors are harmonious and which ones contrast," Boren said.

"It is very difficult for an artist to make it today without good instruction, because it takes hard work and you have to study extremely hard," Boren said.

Another artist featured in the exhibit with Boren is Melvin C. Warren, whose work also embraces the western theme.

Warren is a 60-year-old artist who has painted portraits of famous people, such as former President Lyndon Johnson.

Another exhibit, the Gihon Foundation Collection, is being shown in the MSC Gallery.

This collection was a part of the private collection owned by Bette Graham, the inventor of the Liquid Paper correction fluid.

Two pieces of particular interest in the Gihon collection are paintings by Georgia O'Keefe and Dorothy Hood.

O'Keefe's oil on canvas is called "Taos-New Mexico" and is worth $110,000.

Dorothy Hood's painting "Persephone" depicts the greek goddess; queen of the underworld.

A security guard is posted at the gallery during the day. The gallery is locked at night to protect the $272,500 collection.

The faculty selects the programs shown, the purpose of which is to educate the students about the different aspects of art.
