Prison rodeo continues

United Press International
HUNTSVILLE — A crowd of 20,437 watched as convict cowboys tried to tame tough stock at the second performance of the 49th annual Texas Prison Rodeo Sunday.

Willie Craig, 59, who is from Greenville and is serving 30 years, won two first-place honors last Sunday, but failed to get in the money circle this Sunday.

In an attempt to control a bronc in the bareback contest Craig was slightly injured.

However, Craig said the injury was not serious and he would be back next Sunday shooting for the first place circle.

The opening match scramble contest was won by James Pearson, serving 18 years from Fort Worth.

Other first place winners: Gary Wilson, 10 years from Fort Worth, bareback bronc; Billy Long, 10 years from Odessa, saddle bronc riding; and Euvel Carter, 10 years Lubbock, bull riding.

The hard money event was declared no contest when one of 40 red-shirt performers picked up the tobacco sack off the ground. Rules say the sack must be removed from the horns of a bull to qualify the contestant for a cash prize.

As a result of the judge's ruling, a prize of $220 will be added to the regular $100 prize at the Oct. 19 contest.

Special performers were Faron Young and Ernest Tubb. Next Sunday's rodeo will feature Billie Jo Spears, one of the nation's top country western personalities.

'God sometimes moves in mysterious ways'

United Press International
HOUSTON — Houston outfielder Terry Puhl would trade his record-setting hitting performance in the National League Championship for a chance to play in the World Series and for a time Sunday night, he thought he was going to have both.

"When we went up 5-2, we were so up ... and then everything collapsed on us," said Puhl, who had four hits in five at-bats in Sunday night's 8-7, 10-inning loss to the World Series-bound Philadelphia Phillies.

Puhl was 10-for-18 in the five-game series with the Phillies, marking the first time any player had amassed 10 hits in an NL playoff.

"We had it and they took it from us," Puhl said. "It was a battle ... the whole series was a battle."

Puhl rocked back and forth in a metal chair and gazed aimlessly at the ceiling, clutching an unopened can of beer in his hand. He was asked to describe his feelings.

"It was a complete high and then a flip and you're going home. You're not going to put on your uniform anymore. It's hard to comprehend that right now."

Puhl said the Phillies rose to great heights and said of Pete Rose: "He showed me a lot of class. He's a real battler. I thought we had them. I didn't think they'd come back. The hardest thing about losing was coming within six outs of winning."

Tears flowed in the place of champagne in the Astros' dressing room and nobody cried harder than Nolan Ryan.

Ryan, Houston's million dollar right-hander, pitched the Astros to within six outs of the World Series and then surrendered three soft singles and a walk to Philadelphia in the eighth inning. That swung the momentum in favor of the Phils, who went on to the victory.

Although Ryan was not the loser, he still had not showered or spoken with reporters an hour after the game. As he finally trudged from his stool toward the showers, catcher Alan Ashby cut him off, gave him a hug and said: "I'm proud of you. You never did anything wrong. We just didn't do enough for you."

Ryan was one of many tearful Astros who could not believe the game had gotten away.

"I thought we were going to win it," said Houston's Enos Cabell, who made the last out on a soft liner to Garry Maddox in center. "We played our tails off. I think we're a better

"I've cried before and I cry again. I'll cry again tomorrow. I get home but there's nothing I can do about it. God moves in mysterious ways. Just a few feet away, Jose Cruz sat with a hat pounding several pairs of anger. He, too, was crying. "I can't believe it," he said. "I can't believe it. Those don't give up. They keep coming. I thought when we three-run lead we had it. I just kept coming. You've got them credit. They've got team, too. We lost but we're best. I had a good year but it matter now. I just wanted to be in the World Series. That wanted."

Veteran Joe Morgan, who ting and baserunning came September and carried home the playoffs, paced back across the locker room floor. ing all requests for interview got nothing to say. "Morgan-terrorist as he moved among 15,000 in mates, offering his congratulation.

TAMECT — Healthy For Intramurals

If you have been hurt recently participating in an Intramural Sport, you probably came in contact with the good guys and gals in the white coats — the Texas A&M Emergency Care Team.

TAMECT was started 4 years ago by several students who had an interest in this type of program. The organization has grown to about 90 members. Many of these members have worked for the IM Department for the last two years providing first aid protection.

Judy Bruce, a senior Health Education major, is in charge of TAMECT's work with the IM Dept. Her duties include the scheduling of workers, ordering of equipment and follow-up calls on people who have been injured. Bruce said the club is made up of Emergency Medical Technicians (EMTs) and Emergency Care Attendants (EMAs).

"EMTs have the most extensive training with forty hours of hospital work, most of which is spent in the Emergency Room, plus 5 emergency or serious calls with the Houston Fire Department's ambulance," Bruce added.

She said the ECAs have at least a secondary classification in first aid and are not required to participate in the ambulance and hospital training, although many have.

According to Bruce, the club members duties when they are working for the IM Dept. to stabilize the injury. She said they do not give out drugs, do make the decision as to whether an ambulance is called for an injured person.

She also said that there are TAMECT members are all football, volleyball, rugby, collegiate football games, at the bonfire and concert. Bruce added that "We have available to athletic teams if they want us to be at the events."

TAMECT's services are always in the limelight but are visible to those that need them. According to Bruce, they have already stabilized many injuries, broken bones and minor concussions.

Halftime activities will include an ALL SPECTATOR'S SERVING CONTEST with dozens of valuable prizes. Cost of admission will be $1.00.

Long-Driving Contest Opens

The annual IM Long-Driving Contest will be accepting entries beginning today and ending Tuesday, October 21.

Participants are reminded this is the only time that the Field will be used for driving. Participants must furnish their own balls and clubs. The ball will be the "Club Special" entrants must use this ball. Restrictions are made on club length.
