Four-key typewriter

United Press International NEW YORK — Help is on the way for the two-finger typist.

A one-hand typewriter with only four keys has just been developed in Israel, reports the November issue of Science Digest magazine.

The article said the machine forms each character by typing two consecutive strokes, using a combination of one, two, or three keys. The fourth key is for spacing.

Although the first machine was made for Hebrew characters, its creators at the Technion-Israel Institute of Technology said it can be adapted to handle other languages. They said it can be especially useful in situations where the operator must keep one hand free for other tasks.
