Witches threatened by bomb

United Press International
AMARILLO — The leader of a witches' seminar Sunday said irrational fears and inaccurate portrayals of his group as devil worshippers were responsible for a bomb threat against the convention.

The Church of Wicca seminar was interrupted for four hours Saturday when an anonymous caller said bombs had been planted in the hotel hosting the meeting. No explosives were found in a room-by-room search.

Security at the hotel was increased, but Skip Tarrant of New Bern, N.C., an organizer of the convention, said no more threats had been received and the seminar would conclude Sunday as scheduled.

"We didn't expect any of this," Tarrant said. "We knew there might be a protest, but we certainly didn't expect to be threatened or all this media attention."

About 300 people from area churches gathered outside the hotel singing and praying to protest the presence of the 70 modern witches.

Evangelist Judy Mamou, who with her husband, Jimmy, organized the anti-witch rally, told the group: "I'm not going to sign detente with the devil. I'm going to fight the good fight of faith and my weapon is the word of God."

The Mamous claimed the witches would bring "demonic forces" to the city and several local churches conducted "prayer chains" throughout the weekend. The witches did not want to debate the Christian faction.

"We don't get into confrontations, especially when there's no advantage in it," Tarrant said. "I could have had a hell of a good philosophical argument with Mrs. Mamou but there's no reason to encourage or even allow it. I wasn't going to change her mind."

Cub Scouts take on role of candidates

United Press International
LUBBOCK — Ten-year-old Scott Hackwelder, portraying independent presidential candidate John Anderson at a Cub Scout pack's mock political convention, ripped into his opponents.

"I believe it's time we stop playing politics," the fifth grader blustered to his own supporters among Pack 152 and about 200 kids and parents in a crowded school cafeteria.

"Reagan and Carter are both actors. Reagan did his in Hollywood, and Carter is doing his in Washington," the youngster declared.

His supporters broke into a boisterous "impromptu" demonstration. But Hackwelder's detractors in the Carter and Reagan camps responded quickly. Shouting matches erupted.

When the clamor was over, the Carter-Mondale supporters set up camp on the stage.

Flanked by a pair of pint-sized "Secret Service agents," 10-year-old Karl Weddige — displaying an incumbent president's aplomb — strode to the podium.

Noting that he is "almost 11," Weddige promised to lower the voting age to 10 if elected. Eyeing his West Texas constituents, Weddige proposed a pragmatic approach to the nation's water problems: "Take shorter showers."

fore, rather than after signing a contract.
 After the notices appeared, "The Missouri Association of Realtors complained that the ads were interfering with their closing of real estate transactions," she said.
 The study said advertising "has in many instances reduced the total cost of to the consumer of legal services for routine matters."
 The study also reported "evidence that quality (of legal help) need not drop and may even increase after advertising."

Lawyer's ads cut costs, study says

United Press International
WASHINGTON — Lawyer advertising, long banned by the profession, is cutting the cost of routine legal services and has not increased frivolous litigation, a study distributed by the American Bar Association concludes.

The study is the first nationwide analysis of the impact of advertising by lawyers since the Supreme Court ruled in 1977 that attorneys may promote their services, the ABA said.

Entitled "Birth of a Salesman: Lawyer Advertising and Solicitation," the study was prepared by Lori B. Andrews, former staff director of the ABA Commission on Advertising.

"There has been no evidence that advertising has led to unwarranted litigation," she wrote. "Instead of courts feeling overburdened by spurious lawsuits, representatives from other professions have been complaining."

Andrews cited the example of an ad campaign by the Missouri Bar, telling people to "see a lawyer be-
