

Mt. St. Helens may blow again

United Press International
VANCOUVER, Wash. — A new lava dome forming in Mt. St. Helens may be acting as a plug, but scientists say the volcano could erupt again at any time.

The new lava dome, third and largest to appear in the mountain's mile-wide crater since the initial May 18 eruption, had grown to 155 feet high and 900 feet wide by Sunday — more than double its size when first spotted Saturday.

Forest Service spotter pilots said the rate of growth appeared to be slowing some Sunday night and reported a decrease in emissions from the peak, indicating the lava dome may be acting like a plug.

"It is still in an eruptive stage," Steve Walter of the University of Washington's seismic monitoring laboratory said. "It could go again at any time."

Susan Russell-Robinson, a U.S. Geological Survey scientist, said the appearance and growth of the new dome stemmed from the last of four eruptions that began Thursday night and ended with a triple blast Saturday. She said some molten lava is still coming out of the volcano's main channel.

Scientists believe the cracks now widening on the surface of the lava dome are caused by atmospheric cooling of molten rock from the volcano's interior.

Russell-Robinson said the new dome could grow very large or blow out as the other two have.

Scientists consider the four outbursts to be part of the same "eruptive phase," the fifth since the volcano's initial May eruption that left 63 people dead or missing.

Previous eruptive phases have ended with deep tremors rumbling below the volcano. Seismologists noted only a slight rumbling of shallow surface quakes this time.

The latest series of eruptions has been the longest and probably the least forceful since the mountain ended a 123-year dormancy this spring.

The multiple eruptions sent ash clouds up to 9 miles in the sky and dropped a thin layer of grit on cities as far away as Portland, Ore.

Delegates leaving Manila

Rivals accused of bombing

United Press International
MANILA, Philippines — President Ferdinand E. Marcos Monday blamed U.S.-based Filipino dissidents for a bombing that disrupted a convention of American travel agents and injured 20 people, including seven Americans.

Several of those accused are former Philippines presidential candidates.

Joseph Stone, president of the American Society of Travel Agents, said the executive committee decided to scrap all public functions and trade shows, and hold the working sessions indoors after Sunday's explosion.

Monday's sessions were held behind guarded and closed doors but about 100 delegates packed their bags to return to the United States and more were expected to follow.

ASTA sources said 500 others were prepared to leave within the next several days and from 1,500 to 2,000 had advanced departure dates.

"We're leaving," said Victor Meson, 35, of El Paso, a delegate to the convention. "I'm not scared of the bomb, but I'm a businessman and there's no business here."

William Waltrip, representing Pan American Airways at ASTA's 50th anniversary convention, said bluntly: "It (the convention) is canceled for all intents and purposes." Marcos said he would seek the arrest of 30 people in connection with the bombing that occurred about 10 minutes after the Philippine president told the 5,000 convention delegates their coming made a mockery of a terrorist threat to disrupt the holding of the convention.

Marcos sat down with the delegates to watch a movie documentary and the lights were put out in the opulent plenary hall. As film clips of the Spanish-American War were shown, the bomb went off about 50 feet behind Marcos and U.S. Ambassador Richard Murphy.

Neither Marcos nor Murphy was injured by the blast.

Among those Marcos accused of involvement in the bombing were four former presidential hopefuls, including Benigno Aquino Jr., who now lives near Boston.

About 20 of those accused by Marcos are living in the United States.

Other former presidential candidates named by Marcos were former Sens. Jovito Salonga, Sergio Osmeña Jr. and Raul Manglapus. All except Salonga are in exile in the United States.

After the explosion, Marcos went to see Los Angeles food dealer Victor Burns Lovely and reportedly accepted Lovely's offer to turn state evidence against the terrorists.

Marcos said he will soon issue arrest orders for suspects implicated in the past by Lovely.

The Philippines-born Lovely was seriously injured Sept. 6 when a bomb he is accused of constructing went off prematurely in a Manila hotel room.

Political observers called the bombing the biggest embarrassment for Marcos, 63, in eight years of martial law. Authorities had hoped ASTA would promote travel to the Philippines despite terrorist actions.

The anti-Marcos April 6 Liberation Movement claimed responsibility for the bombing in a telephone call to the Agence France Presse news agency.

Police said they were looking for four "Caucasian" suspects in the bombing.

Police and hospital sources identified the wounded Americans as Frederick Cooper, 64, and his wife Betty, 61, of Aiken, S.C.; Robert Fischer of Arlington Heights, Ill.; Clifford Archer and his wife Lola of Glendale, Calif.; June Breen of Washington, D.C., and Joseph H. Richter of Loveland, Ohio.

'Wheeeeer's Johnny?'
Recovering

United Press International
BURBANK, Calif. — Johnny Carson, who either broke or bruised his ribs while rehearsing for a sketch, is "resting at home" this week.

"He was scheduled to be on vacation from the 'Tonight Show' this week," an NBC spokesman said. "All we know is he is resting at home."

Carson, 54, fell on his side instead of his back while rehearsing a "Mighty Carson Art Players" sketch about a gambler who shoots himself after losing a fortune in Las Vegas.

Carson concealed the injury from the audience for the first 50 minutes of the one-hour show last Friday night, but the entertainer could hide his pain no longer.

"If I look a little silly, I want you to know why," Carson told his viewers. "There were sounds from inside the body you don't like to hear."

It was the first time in 18 years Carson had injured himself doing the show.
