Coordinating board to meet

Presentation of a long-range plan for Texas higher education in the 1980s will highlight the quarterly meeting of the Coordinating Board of the Texas College and University System Friday in Austin.

The board also will consider requests for more than $40 million in campus construction projects.

The meeting will be held at 9 a.m. in the Bevington A. Reed Building, 200 E. Riverside Dr.

The long-range plan, proposed for adoption in January, includes recommendations for the 1981 legislative session, a Coordinating Board news release said.

The proposed recommendations urge the legislature to avoid across-the-board cuts in higher education, suggesting several alternatives for reduced spending in specific areas — such as combining nearby colleges, shutting down certain branch campus operations or reducing funding for off-campus courses.

Another proposed recommendation supports efforts to include all schools of the University of Texas and Texas A&M University systems in the Permanent University Fund if the endowment and its income can provide adequate funding for their construction needs.

However, the board will recommend that the Legislature reject proposals to increase the bonding capacity of the Permanent University Fund from 20 to 30 percent of the value.

In other action, the board will consider a request to authorize an election to establish a new community college district to serve residents of the Alief and Katy area west of Houston.

The board also will be asked to adopt a new core curriculum for the bachelor's degree in theater arts and a revised core curriculum for business administration. Core curricula have been adopted by the Board in six fields as a means of facilitating the transfer of students among colleges without losing course credit.

Indians' views to be read

By CINDY GEE

Most people have heard the voice of "The Shadow" on their radio, but few have seen someone read such a story with emotion and feeling.

Today people seldom have the opportunity to sit back and listen to a story being read to them; they either watch TV, in which there's little room for the imagination, or read a story and interpret it themselves.

Jo Hudson, a speech professor at Texas A&M University, is trying to promote oral interpretive readings. Last fall, she formed an oral interpretive organization for students called Between the Lines.

Tonight at 7:30 in 107 Rudder, four students from the group will perform "Reflections of the Native American," a script taken from the writings of three contemporary native Americans.

"The idea of this performance is to give the audience a better understanding of the plight of the American Indian, and how he has viewed this century and the past," Hudson said.

The group took this performance to an oral interpretive festival on American folklore at Texas Tech. She said the students don't compete with other groups in such festivals, but instead they get together to share literature and discuss techniques used in interpretive readings.

Between the Lines is a group that can benefit both the students who read the stories, and students in the audience, Hudson said. The group would be happy to perform literature for other classes, she added.

Education, political science and communications majors would find the group especially helpful, Hudson said. "Think how important it is for an elementary teacher to be able to read aloud to children," she said.
