Local Work ethic weakening fast, ex-deputy chancellor says

By MARY ANN HINNANT
Battalion Reporter

The American work ethic is dying, said former deputy chancellor Fred J. Benson during a Friday speech in Rudder Theatre.
Benson, who retired from Texas A&M in August as the deputy chancellor for engineering and renewable resources, told a crowd of about 200 people that the desire to work was much stronger in 1941. Benson attributed this to the Depression in the 1930's and to the United States entering World War II.
"Those people who experienced the Depression had a strong desire to work," Benson said. "It was necessary to work, and much empathy was built up among the American people because most everyone was in the same situation."
"People devoted themselves to earning a living and the work ethic was the predominant element of thinking," Benson said. "In 1946 the United States was the strongest and most productive nation in the world. Our military was the strongest and our work force was the most prominent," he said.
Benson compared the people's response to the war in the '40s with the response to the oil embargo in 1973 and the increasing dependence on foreign oil reserves.
Benson said even though it has been seven years since the oil embargo, the nation still has not solved dependence problem on foreign oil. Whereas in the period between 1941 and 1944, Americans could solve "insurmountable problems" such as creating a rubber tree and a munitions industry.
Benson blamed the change in attitude toward work ethic on those people who experienced the effects of the depression.
"People of these times were determined to make better for their children," Benson said. "They were spare them from the trauma that had been their own."
"Present laws hinder the productive work of people under 18 although the voting age has been lowered to age 18," Benson added. "These people are expected to vote without knowing life's real responsibilities."
Benson also commented on the increasing dependence on security from the federal government.
"As a people we want protection from nearly all calamities," Benson said. "We turned to the federal government for retirement and medical benefits, protection from pollution and discrimination."
Benson said the emphasis on security has led to a "substantial loss of freedom and a substantial increase in the portions of the fruits of our labor going into the system to provide the funds needed to support this security system."
According to Benson, the American people have developed the idea that all are entitled to this security whether or not they contribute to the work force. This has led to the development of programs such as stamps, unemployment insurance and welfare programs.

Owner says $150,000 not enough

Commission settles on price

By STARR MOORE
Battalion Reporter

A special three-member commission cleared the way Friday for the expansion of the Brazos County Courthouse by awarding a $150,000 judgement for the condemned property next to the courthouse.
The property, which includes the Lilly Dairy Products and Joe Faulk Auto Parts buildings, will be used by the county in the $10 million courthouse expansion and renovation project.
Special commissioners Alvin B. Wooten, Lambert H. Wilkes and Allan W. Hanson were appointed by County Court at Law Judge James A. Amis Jr. after the Brazos County Commissioners Court filed condemnation proceedings to obtain the land by right of eminent domain.
Owner of both sites, Boy Barnes, said the land was correctly appraised, but that it was appraised according to what it is worth to the country, not to him.
Before the $150,000 decision was reached, Barnes said, if he were not given a fair price of at least $400,000, he might sue the county.
Brazos County appraised the land for $118,000, and Barnes said that sum was just not enough.
"I do feel like this offer was an insult, not only to me but to the entire county," Barnes said.
He said the people who made the decision were employed by the county.
Barnes said there is no question that he could have received more than $400,000 for his property, but the county had not condemned it.
Barnes has 10 days to appeal the decision, but would not say whether he intends to do so.
Barnes is not the only person unhappy with the decision. The owners of the Western Auto store and the property on which it sits are also displeased.
Thursday, the special commission awarded $111,000 in a separate condemnation proceeding for the Western Auto building which will house the new county tax office.
But the owners of Western Auto have indicated they may appeal the decision.
They feel about their property like Barnes feels about his — it could sell for more on the open market.
The commissioners court had allocated $360,000 for the purchase and renovation of the property to accommodate the tax office.

Ixtoc oilspill studied

Three Texas A&M University oceanographers participated in an 11-month study to determine the damages caused by the world's largest oil spill, the Ixtoc I spill off the Yucatan Peninsula last year.
Chemical oceanographers on the scene 10 weeks after the major spill found nearly all the highly-toxic, volatile hydrocarbons were gone from the surface slick within 12 miles of the wellhead, most by evaporation.
The project, which was sponsored and released by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, consisted of 10 groups of scientists with each investigating a particular aspect of the spill.
The Texas A&M research team composed of Dr. James Brooks, Denis Wiesenburg and Dr. Mark Kennicutt, dealt primarily with distribution and behavior of gaseous volatile hydrocarbons from the million-barrel spill.
"Ours was a small study that involved the dispersion of gaseous volatile hydrocarbons," said Brooks. "It represents the first detailed sampling for gaseous and volatile hydrocarbons around a major oil spill."
Brooks said in the report laboratory and field tests suggest only a small percentage of volatile liquid hydrocarbons are related into the water from an oil slick.
