Aggies prepare for regional meet

By JON HEIDTKE

Battalion Staff
Texas A&M women's cross country team travels to Arkansas Saturday to run in the Southwest Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (SWAIW) Regional Meet.

At stake is a possible trip to the national meet in Seattle, Washington. The top two teams from the region, plus the top 15 individual finishers, will all qualify for the Nov. 15 meet to be held on the University of Washington campus.

Coach Bill Nix says Texas should be the favorite to capture the team title, but he expects a three-team race for the all important runner-up spot.

Oklahoma University, Lamar and Texas A&M all have a legitimate shot at second place. Last week in the state meet, Lamar nipped the Aggies by six points to finish second, but this week Nix says the Aggies are out to reverse the finish.

"We are looking good at this point," Nix said. "I was pleased with last week's performance, but we should be even better this week since Annie Muniz's injury is improved."

Muniz is the team's fifth best runner at this time, but has been bothered by a stretched achilles tendon. Nix says Muniz is ready to go this weekend, and "if she runs like she can, we should have a good shot at second place."

The weather has been cool in Fayetteville all week and the course is hilly, but Nix says both could work in the Aggies favor.

The temperature is expected to be in the low 40s for the meet, and all week the Aggie runners have been working out in the crisp weather and Nix says the team should be acclimated to the conditions.

As for the hilly course, the team has been working out on the banks of the Brazos River all season in preparation for the regional meet, and is in good shape.

"The thing that is gonna be the most this weekend," Nix says, "is the fact that we have been running as a team. And if we finish our runners within 30 seconds of each other, it should be enough to finish second."

Nix will take the same runners who have competed the past three weeks. The seven women are Sarah Brown, Beverly Porter, Barbara Linsworth, Muniz, Adelaide, Lisa McCorstin and Mary Matheny.

Nix added the overall competition for the first 20 individual spots will be very strong. "It will be the best the region has ever seen," he

You and I share the same stake in the future of America: in the rebuilding of our economic and military strength, in the production — here at home — of the energy we need at a price we can afford, in reducing the excessive red tape and government regulation which threatens our economic and political freedoms and in reaffirming the sovereignty of the individual citizen.

The kind of nation we pass on to our children will depend on the success of these efforts. I am concerned, as I know you are, that unless we act, and act quickly, to put free enterprise, individual liberty and a strong defense back on top of our list of national priorities, our children will not inherit the legacy of freedom and prosperity that we have enjoyed.

herit the legacy of freedom and prosperity that we have enjoyed.

I'm proud of the work I have done in the past two years as your representative in Congress. And I know that just as I will expect more of myself in the next two years, you will expect more of me as well.

I ask you, with your vote on Tuesday, November 4, to renew my contract to represent you in Congress for two more years. Working together, I believe we will succeed — for ourselves, and our children.
