Atlanta child identified

United Press International
ATLANTA — A child whose body was discovered beside a riverbank during the weekend was identified Monday as Aaron Jackson Jr., 9, the 15th black child to be found dead or reported missing in Atlanta since July 1979.

After a preliminary examination, Dr. John Feegel, associate medical examiner, called the boy's death "very reminiscent of some of the other" children's deaths, but said he would make an official ruling on the cause of death later.

A medical technician who attended the body when it was found along the banks of the South River said there seemed to be abrasions on the boy's neck, indicating possible strangulation.

Four of 10 other black children found dead over the past 15 months in Atlanta were asphyxiated, three by strangulation, officials said.

Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown said there were no suspects in the Jackson case.

Police said the boy disappeared Saturday morning from his home — about a mile from where his body was found. But officials said he was not reported missing because he often stayed overnight at a friend's house and his father apparently believed he was there on Saturday night.

Jackson's disappearance follows a 6-month pattern in the puzzling cases of dead and missing children. He disappeared 24 days after another black youth vanished. Since May, children involved in the case have been reported missing an average of 25 days apart.

Jackson lived in a predominantly black, low-income neighborhood of south Atlanta, which also follows a pattern established in the other cases.

All 15 cases involved children between the ages of seven and 14.

Feegel said the Jackson youth was 4-feet-8 and weighed 84 pounds. He was a fair-skinned black with short hair, characteristics which other victims also showed.

Feegel said he found no signs the boy was sexually molested. He withheld a final ruling pending completion of an autopsy.

None of the previous 12 missing victims and only one of the two victims were sexually molested.

A man on a Sunday stroll found Jackson's body at 2:50 p.m. As he crossed a bridge over the South River, the man spotted the boy sprawled on the rocks below, with inches of the river.

Police said the body appeared to be carefully placed on the rocks "laid out flat like a sleeping bag." Jackson was wearing blue and black tennis shoes and a plaid shirt.

The body was found in an industrial area surrounded by low-income housing projects.

About 1,500 volunteers searched vacant lots and wooded areas near the home of one of the missing children. But no new victims were found in the city's second straight weekend of volunteer searches.

Three weekends ago, the remains of LaTonya Wilson, 7, were found in an initial search by 500 volunteers.

Politician's dad donates to son's rival

United Press International
ASPEN, Colo. — Blood, they say, is thicker than water. But it may not be thicker than politics.

Wilton Jaffee Jr., in a bitter battle for a seat on the Pitkin County Commission, recently learned his father had donated money to his opponent.

"I'm furious," Jaffee said, even though the offending contribution was only $50.

"I've had dozens of friends I've merely shaken hands with (those) who've given me more," Jaffee said. "He's a long-standing friend of (opponent) Bob Child."

Does the younger Jaffee still get along with dad?

"That's not a fair question," he said.

Boston school bus drivers' Work stoppage ends after three weeks

United Press International
BOSTON — School bus drivers returned to work Monday, ending a three-week strike that left 27,500 students without service and drastically reduced attendance at public schools.

Officials reported most of the more than 400 regularly scheduled runs were covered by the drivers, beginning shortly after 7 a.m.

The drivers, whose numbers gradually dwindled as the wildcat strike wore on, voted 118-13 Sunday night to end the walkout, which was marred by violence and arrests on two occasions.

ARA Services, Inc., the Philadelphia-based firm contracted to bus school children in the city's racial desegregation program, agreed to reinstate all fired drivers with pay after a 30-day suspension.

The settlement came hours before $25,000 in daily fines against the union were to go into effect. The fines imposed by U.S. District Judge Rya Zobel were to begin Monday. Instead, attorneys for both sides appeared before the judge to review the settlement.

About 500 members of Local 8751 of the United Steelworkers of America walked off their jobs when the wildcat strike began Oct. 9. Many returned to work eight days later, however, after 19 drivers were jailed, refusing to honor a back-to-work order. The drivers then defied a preliminary injunction against picketing.

The walkout was one of the longest wildcat strikes in the Steelworkers' history. The drivers' contract, which contained a no-strike clause, but union members said the result was invalid because ARA violated other clauses.

Safety had been one issue raised by the drivers when they struck the company. They claimed some of the buses had mechanical defects and they were ignored.

Many minor issues were left unresolved in the settlement. They were to be worked out with a state arbitrator to be selected by the union.

A 30-day suspension is in effect for 19 disloyal union leaders, but union spokeswoman Kara Speltz said "their record is clean after that" and they will be allowed to return to work.

The company agreed to drop a suit against the union and Speltz said the union "will drop our unfair labor practice suit against them."
