

Macho men to strut their stuff

By CINDY GEE

What on-the-ball male would turn down a chance to win $50, get free booze, and have the attention of 100, more than likely interested, women all in one night?

Not Robert Campbell, a sophomore bio-medical science major at Texas A&M University. Campbell, a Houston native, heard about the Macho Man Contest at Zacharias Greenhouse from his sister and a friend and decided to enter.

"My sister said there'll be free drinks, you'll be surrounded by pretty girls, and there's a chance you might win 50 bucks," Campbell said. "Then Exxon came calling and I had an awful big bill to pay, so I guess the 50 bucks finalized my decision to enter."

Last month Zacharias Greenhouse had its first Macho Man Contest, and they will have another contest tonight (Nov. 6) at 8 p.m.

Ten men — ranging in occupation from a construction worker to a jockey, and in size from 6 feet 1 inch and 230 pounds to 5 foot 5 inches and 130 pounds — will compete in the male beauty contest. They will compete for various titles such as best hair, best legs, best chest, best personality, and last, but not least, Mr. Macho.

Gregg Andrews, a bartender at Zacharias who is organizing this month's contest, said the idea of having a macho contest was just a joke, but some women who heard the discussion took them seriously and kept asking when it was going to be.

"It started getting a lot of attention," Andrews said, "so we decided to set a date. We weren't even planning to do any advertising until about a week before, but when that week before came, the place was already full. We took reservations."

Andrews said the women went wild.

"There was a complete variety of girls there," he said. "Everything from the little Southern goody, goody girls, to housewives, to lots of young single women. Lots and lots of them got really snookered.

"I had a blast watching them go crazy; it kind of lets you know they're not any different than you are."

Andrews said a second contest was not originally planned, but women customers demanded it.

The men will come out in their nice clothes first, and then Andrews, who is also the emcee for the contest, will read their hobbies, interests, and goals in life. Next, they will come out in their shorts or bathing suit. Andrews said a couple of them will dance, but most will stand there and answer questions.

"I was a little disappointed," Campbell said. "It seems like everyone got risqué questions but me. I think the girls were looking for someone who could get up there and ham it up.

"I never thought of myself as that confident or macho; I think I'm just more of a nut. I hadn't done anything looney all semester, so why not?"

Is there a possibility that College

Station might soon have a La Zachs?

Andrews said he didn't think so. "I think a male dancer club would make it in College Station, but we're going to stay the same type of club that we are. We'll probably continue to have contests every month."
