Local Russian pianist to perform

Bella Davidovich, one of the world's leading pianists, will perform in Rudder Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

Davidovich will perform Chopin, Schuman and Mendelson in her OPAS-sponsored concert. Tickets are still available and range from $3.25 to $8.

Davidovich was the last Russian to win the prestigious International Chopin Competition in 1949. She performed with the Leningrad Philharmonic for 27 consecutive years.

Davidovich immigrated to the United States shortly after her 1978 European tour was cancelled. Her son, Demetri, was studying the violin at the Juilliard School of Music in New York when the tour was cancelled. Davidovich received permission to immigrate with her mother and now lives in the United States.

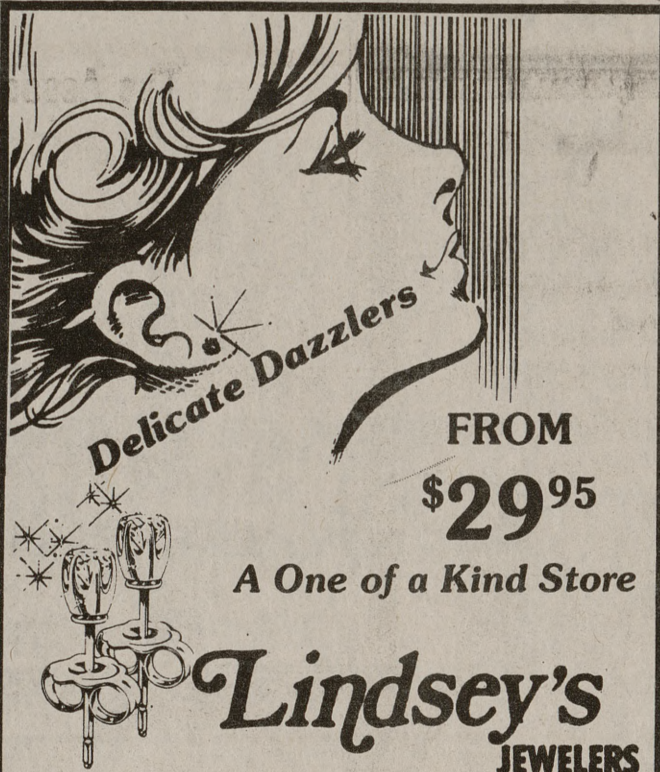

She made her American debut last year in Carnegie Hall and has been well received in her current tour. Davidovich first performed when she was nine and has performed with every major Russian conductor.

Liberal Arts council trying to keep students informed

By SHERRY A. EVANS
Battalion Reporter

Letting liberal arts majors know what is going on both in their college and across Texas A&M University is the main objective this year of the College of Liberal Arts Student Council, President Edie Schaffer said.

The council, which was formed in 1976, is the representative body of close to 1700 undergraduate liberal arts majors, Schaffer said. The council suffers, however, because "no one knows we exist," Schaffer said. "If there's anything we've wanted to change this year, it's that."

Schaffer said the way to change this image is to be as active as possible and, for this reason, a major project of the council this semester is the distribution of the council's first newsletter, Scenario.

Since the council's unanimous decision in September to produce a newsletter, Schaffer said, all the members have become reporters this semester. Scenario is to include articles on the Liberal Arts Student Council, personalities in the College of Liberal Arts, new course offerings, the Liberal Arts Honors Committee and test taking.

Scenario will be distributed to all liberal arts majors through their advisers and council members during the week of pre-registration (Nov. 17) and a stand will be set up in the Academic Building so students can pick up a copy. Schaffer said the newsletter will be coming out again in February and in April.

Although funds for production of the newsletter are scarce, Schaffer said she hopes there will be a favorable enough response so that the council's appropriations from the Student Finance Office can possibly be increased.

To serve on the council, Schaffer said, the advisers in each of the liberal arts departments select two students of any classification who they feel will best represent the council of 22 members.

The council's personal adviser this year is Dr. Candida Lutes of the psychology department, Schaffer said. The major function of the adviser, Schaffer said, is to serve as a "springboard" for ideas, to give suggestions and to provide help when necessary. The adviser "serves as an impetus to attempt the impossible," Schaffer said.

Although the council suffers from lack of recognition, Schaffer said she feels the role of the council seems to be broadening. This year, the council is opening nominations college-wide to all liberal arts majors for the Teaching Excellence Award which in the past the nominations had come only from the council members.

Council members not only work on the newsletter, but also serve as members of several faculty committees and report back to the council what is going on in these committees, Schaffer said.

The council also votes and gives advice on university-wide issues such as listing minors on official transcripts and the drinking of alcoholic beverages on campus, Schaffer said.

Schaffer said she is extremely pleased with this year's council. "We have a lot of talent on this council. Every person on the council is a leader."

"This is the busiest semester that the Liberal Arts Student Council has ever had," Schaffer said, "and I hope it that it continues that way."
