'Giving spirits' kept alive with tradition

Couple collects candy for the retarded

By GLENN KRAMPOTA
Battalion Reporter

People almost always remember to leave milk and cookies out for Santa Claus. It's part of the Christmas spirit. But a couple in College Station has been keeping their "giving spirit" alive with another meaningful tradition: they collect candy for children at the Austin State School for the Retarded.

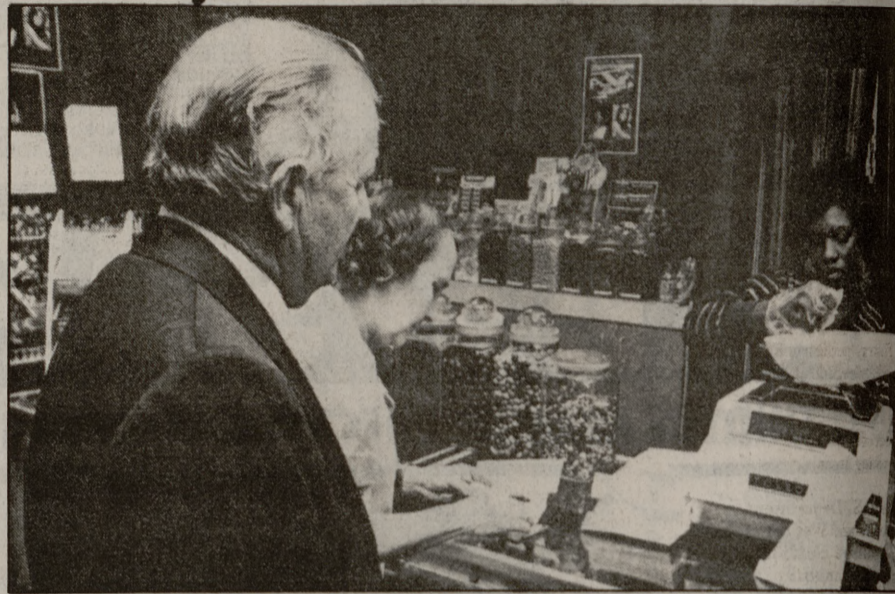

They began, according to Mary Robinette, 17 years ago by collecting leftover Halloween candy for the children. Now Mary and her husband Jim collect donations of money and unopened candy.

Both are staff members at Texas A&M University. Mary is a research technician for the horticulture department and Jim is a laboratory mechanic in chemistry.

Their interest in the project stems from the fact that they have a 23-year-old son in the Austin State School. "We don't stress amounts of money, or amounts of candy," Mary said.

The important thing, she said, is to remember those at the school who cannot go home for Christmas. Some of the children will stay at the school indefinitely, she said.

"I'd rather get 100 people to donate a dollar than get a few big donations," she said, "because that means more people remember (the children)."
