Reagan praised for ending oil controls

United Press International
 Texas energy producers Wednesday hailed President Reagan's termination of petroleum price controls as the first step toward putting the oil industry on the same footing as all other U.S. industries.
 "We commend President Reagan and his administration for putting an immediate end to federal price controls on crude oil," said Edwin L. Cox of Dallas, president of the Texas Mid-Continent Oil & Gas Association.
 "The removal of price controls, which have existed for nine years, will permit the petroleum industry in this country to operate in the same manner as other U.S. businesses.

 "During this period both production and reserves have dropped and our energy shortage has become more acute. Imports increased from 29 percent (in 1972) to as much as 48 percent (in 1977) of demand."
 Cox said Reagan's action would lessen dependence on foreign oil by encouraging domestic exploration and drilling. He also said it would hasten the development of expensive and sophisticated recovery systems, permitting the maximum recovery of hydrocarbon resources.

 He also said it would encourage development of alternative energy sources.
 A spokesman for Shell Oil echoed Cox's praise for Reagan.
 "There's no question that decontrol will result in an increased search for new domestic crude and thus will ultimately reduce dependence on imported oils," the company statement said. "Of course, a significant benefit for the nation is removal of the costly administrative burden which resulted from this program.

 "Shell anticipates that this early transition to crude, motor gasoline and propane decontrol will proceed as smoothly as did the transition when controls on other products were lifted in recent years."

George P. Mitchell of Mitchell Energy and Development Corp. said "every oilman in the country now has added incentive to explore for and produce more oil and gas."
 "The president, in effect, is telling our industry 'full speed ahead!'"
