Cowboys owner sued by nephew

United Press International
DALLAS — A nephew of Dallas Cowboys owner Clint Murchison Jr. has filed suit in State District Court alleging the team owner's family had wrongfully withheld a $30 million trust fund from him.

The suit was filed earlier this week by John Dabney Murchison Jr. against the elder Murchison, his son Clint III, and cousins Burk Yarborough Murchison, Robert Frank Murchison and Coke Ann Murchison.

The lawsuit claims the money from a trust established by his late grandfather, C.W. Murchison, should have been turned over to him in April 1973, when he turned 25. He says he has not been able to assume the assets because the trust has been used as collateral for at least three loans secured by other members of the Murchison family.

The suit maintains developer Clint Murchison III was responsible for the misuse of the trust, one of four the grandfather set up for his four grandchildren.

Innocent plea made by Daniel's widow

United Press International
LIBERTY — Vickie Daniel pleaded innocent Wednesday to murder in the Jan. 19 shooting death of her husband, former Texas House Speaker Price Daniel Jr.

State District Judge Clarence Cain read Mrs. Daniel, 33, a murder indictment issued by a Liberty County grand jury and asked for her plea. She calmly answered, "Not guilty," in the 9 a.m. proceeding that took five minutes.

"I did not intentionally shoot my husband," Mrs. Daniel told reporters as she left the courthouse.

Cain scheduled a March 20 hearing to dispose of pretrial matters. Defense lawyer Andrew Lannie, who has suggested Mrs. Daniel acted in self-defense, has said he might try to move the trial to assure a fair trial.

No trial date was set.

District Attorney Carroll E. Wilborn Jr. also attended the docket call that moved on to other cases immediately after Mrs. Daniel's arraignment.

Liberty County Sheriff Buck Eckols, on Jan. 24, filed a murder charge against Mrs. Daniel, alleging she shot her husband in a domestic dispute over their pending divorce.

She had filed for divorce twice in their four-year marriage, most recently Dec. 31.

On Jan. 28, a Liberty County grand jury heard from two dozen witnesses and debated the case until nearly midnight before endorsing Eckols' charge with a murder indictment.

Mrs. Daniel, who has not submitted to questions from investigators, did not appear before the grand jury.

Daniel, 39, a lawyer, newspaper publisher, land developer and son of former Texas Gov. Price Daniel Sr., was shot once with a .22-caliber rifle at the spacious home the couple shared on the Daniel family ranch outside Liberty.

The fatal bullet went through his abdomen, ripped his aorta (the body's main artery), and lodged in his spine. He bled to death.

Ambulance attendants responded to a call from Mrs. Daniel about 7:40 p.m. Jan. 19. Witnesses described her as hysterical. She was hospitalized for five days after the shooting for what was called "traumatic shock."

Lannie has suggested Mrs. Daniel acted in self-defense, that she was bruised during a confrontation immediately before the shooting and that she fired a warning shot through the ceiling before the bullet that killed Daniel.

Eckols, in repeated vehement public statements, has rejected the self-defense argument.

Fort Worth legislator tries again

Willis thinks blue law will be repealed

United Press International
AUSTIN — A Fort Worth legislator, long a crusader to repeal the Texas law that prohibits stores from selling certain items on consecutive Saturdays and Sundays, is optimistic the Legislature will finally agree with him.

Rep. Doyle Willis, D-Fort Worth, said his bill repealing Texas' blue law stands a good chance of passing before the current session concludes on June 1.

Willis, a crusty 72-year-old former state senator, failed to get his pet bill up before the House last session. In 1979 "we didn't even get out of the blocks" and the legislation died in a business and industry subcommittee.

"The chances are good we're going to pass this bill this time," he said. "I can pass it if I can get it to the House floor."

Willis said if he were a candidate for governor, he would run on a platform advocating the repeal of the blue law.

"I don't know what better issue there would be other than the blue law," he said.

Texas' blue law prohibits stores from selling on consecutive Saturdays and Sundays most household and personal items that are not edible. Willis said the law is silly and Texans want it repealed.

"If you can buy beer on Sunday, why can't you buy pantyhose, a hammer or something else you need," he said. "It's a little silly."

The Fort Worth legislator said lobbyists by organizations that represent large department stores have usually done their share to defeat legislation repealing Texas' blue law. Willis said department stores do not want grocery stores and other smaller stores competing for the same business on Sundays.

"They also argue that it will force people to work on Sunday, but that old dog won't hunt anymore," he said.

Willis said he and other legislators have sent out questionnaires to their constituents and the results indicate that as many as 85 percent of Texans favor repeal of the blue law.

"I've even seen 12 or 15 newspapers carry editorials in favor of repeal of the blue law," he said. "And I haven't seen any editorials in favor of keeping the blue law."

Willis said his bill, which also would void all lawsuits pending in courts because of the blue law, would alleviate the inconvenience it places on citizens.

"The people in my district are all honest, God-fearing people," he said. "But they are against the blue law. They want to be able to stop at the store and buy something after church on Sunday."

Embarrassed Supplier Hit Fifth Straight Year

Surveying his un-touched inventory of off-brand merchandise Steve Studley of Stupendous Stereo Storehouse stated, "The Dyer bunch took only the good stuff". Armed with a purchase order form and a keen eye for quality, Jerry Dyer and his gang stormed Steve's Storehouse in broad daylight for the fifth consecutive year. While the robbery was in progress, Steve's employees were placed in the office area and treated to beer and tamales by the Dealers. Police were quoted as saying the caper was reported two days later by Studley's happy employees who refused to press charges but offered to press the officer's uniforms. "I can't get too mad", Studley said, "because they share the loot with every hard-core bargain hunter in town". When asked about preparations for a sixth attack by the Dyer gang Steve said "we've already ordered two quarts of guacamole dip and a band".

Only Name-Brand Stereo Taken by Dyer

"I wouldn't even steal a piece of private-label stereo equipment because that's what the dealers who sell it are doing," said Jerry Dyer when asked why only famous stereo is found in his hideouts. Questioned further about this nefarious practice Dyer said "they jack up the fake list price then knock off $40 and sell it for three times what it's worth."

Dyer agreed that there was nothing illegal with private-label stereo but said that "it's a question of value." "We depend on repeat and referral business for our growth and you only get that by selling the best there is at the lowest possible price."
