United Press International HARTFORD, Conn. — Flags were ordered flown at half staff today for former Gov. Ella T. Grasso, the Italian immigrants' daughter who built a 27-year unbeaten political legacy to become the first woman governor elected in her own right.

Grasso, 61, died of cancer Thursday night at Hartford Hospital. Her husband, Thomas, and the couple's two children, Jim and Susane, were

Gov. William O'Neill, sworn in New Year's Eve to succeed the ailing governor in her second term, was visibly distraught in discussing the incomplete funeral arrangements. She will not be replaced because she is irreplaceable, nor will she ever be forgotten," O'Neill said. "My heart goes out to the Grasso family my own personal heart is breaking as Grasso's body will lie in state at the Capitol from Sunday morning to Monday morning. A funeral mass will be said Monday at St. Joseph's Cathedral in Hartford. All state flags were ordered flown at half staff.

Former President Jimmy Carter said he would miss Grasso "dearly. 'Ella Grasso represented all that is good and promising about politics and public service. As one of the most prominent women in this country, she had great strength, skill and, when required, toughness," he said in a statement from his Atlanta office. 'She gave of herself so that each of us felt her love and understanding," said Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, D-Conn. "We knew Ella cared and cared deeply.

The official cause of death was listed as cardiac arrest due to multiple organ failure and metastatic cancer of the ovary

Grasso ended her life with the same grit she displayed in in politics— a record that culminated in her becoming the first woman in the nation elected governor in her own

The former two-term congress-woman was elected Connecticut's chief executive in 1974 and again in 1978. She was seen by state voters as the protector of the status quo who the state with frugality - and without an income tax. Grasso's cancer was first diagnosed in April 1980, when physicians found a cluster of malignant cells on an ovary. She underwent a hysterectomy and eight weeks of debilitating radiation treatments. Fatigue and nausea forced the governor to curtail her usual dawn-to-dusk pace. Although she rallied briefly in the summer, she began to look noticeably drawn and tired.

She was back in the hospital in November for phlebitis of the left leg. Doctors, however, found during routine tests the cancer had spread. Chemotherapy was prescribed in an attempt to arrest the disease.

Grasso had struggled to maintain a limited work schedule throughout the ordeal, but announced Dec. 4 she could not fight the disease and perform her duties as governor at the

"Regretfully, it is my belief that I do not have the stamina or the en-durance for the rigors of the new legislative session and the myriad problems which face the administration of a vital and vibrant state, Grasso said. "Accordingly, it is my intention to resign as governor on Dec. 31, 1980.

Phoney money leads police L Classifieds dies of cancer to San Antonio operation

United Press International SAN ANTONIO — Arrests of four men in Georgia and Texas and seizure of more than $5,000 in bogus $20 bills broke up an extensive counterfeit operation in San Antonio, a Secret Service agent said Thursday.

Two of the four suspects, all San Antonio residents, were taken into custody in an Atlanta lounge Jan. 27, and word of the arrests apparently caused the other two men to dump bundles of bogus bills in downtown San Antonio, beginning Saturday, said Barney Boyett, special agent in charge of the local Secret Service
