Electric car maker can't enter show

United Press International CHICAGO — The maker of a Texas-made battery-powered car that was banned from the Chicago Auto Show says major automobile and oil companies influenced show promoters because they want to block sales of the car.

However, civil rights leaders say Amctran Inc., the Dallas-based maker of the prototype car, was banned from the exhibition because it is minority-owned.

Auto show sponsors Sunday said there were a number of legal questions surrounding Amctran and Electric Automobile Distributors of America, creators and distributors of the banned XR-1.

Show officials said Amctran filed for bankruptcy in Dallas in May and is being investigated by "several government agencies." Promoters said the firm also intended to sell distributorships at the show.

In 1975, the Texas attorney general's office barred Amctran President Edmund Ramirez and the firm from selling unregistered securities in the state.

Ramirez charged the major auto and oil companies want to block sales of the XR-1.

"I could get you a list of the top 100 companies in this country, with legal staffs that would fill this room, and each one of them is being investigated by somebody," Ramirez said. "We are being found guilty without anything being proven."

Mike Greco, representative of U.S. Electric Corp., an electric car manufacturer that was allowed in the show, said he thought the major auto manufacturers and dealers put pressure on show promoters to ban the XR-1.

"The big auto companies are running scared — they're not nearly as far along in the production of electric cars," he said. U.S. Electric is an Anthol, Mass., firm.

Two civil rights activists protested the action in a letter to Richard Everman, president of the Chicago Trade Association, and demonstrators gathered outside the auto show on opening day Saturday.

Dr. Ralph Abernathy, former head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and Georgia state Rep. Hosea Williams said the XR-1 was "the only minority-owned automobile in (the) show and perhaps the first such minority-owned automobile in United States history that would have been displayed in a major auto show."
