Councilmen discuss codes

By BELINDA McCOY

The adoption of a revised city building code, electrical code and fire prevention code was discussed in a workshop meeting of the College Station City Council Wednesday.

City Manager North B. Bardell answered questions that the councilmen present had about the various codes.

The Southern Building Code Congress annually revises the Standard Building Code which College Station follows, Bardell said, and the city has the right to include its own amendments in its code.

Councilmen spoke favorably of adopting the 1979 edition of the Standard Building Code, its latest edition, with its 1980 revisions and city amendments.

One of those amendments will be the requirement of a platt plan of proposed work in the city.

"We can even go so far as to require a survey (of the land in question)," Bardell said.

The amendments will also include the mandatory installation of an automatic sprinkler system in commercial buildings with more than 15,000 square feet per floor, in hotels and motels with two or more floors, and in office buildings with more than two floors.

Councilmen also spoke favorably of adopting the 1979 edition of the Standard Fire Prevention Code with its 1980 revisions and the city's amendments.

One of those amendments prohibits the driver or operator of a truck discharging flammable liquids to be out of sight or reach of the discharge valves while the valves are open.

Another amendment requires the installation of water lines and fire hydrants on construction sites before combustible materials such as wood can be used in the construction.

Approval of the National Electrical Code was indicated by councilmen, also, although some complained of its technical wording.

"The National Electrical Code is a complicated doctrine," said Bardell. "We just have to accept it on the face."

EDS seeks judgment overruling Reagan order

United Press International
DALLAS — Attorneys for Electronic Data Systems Wednesday studied President Reagan's executive order suspending claims of U.S. companies against Iran to determine if it will effect EDS' $19 million judgment against the Iranian government.

Reagan's order, part of a series of moves by U.S. officials to implement key parts of the hostage release agreement with Iran, contradicts U.S. District Judge Robert Porter's Feb. 12 ruling that the president does not have the constitutional power to suspend pending litigation seeking more than $3 billion in Iranian assets held in the United States.

Porter's comment came when he issued a temporary injunction to prevent the federal government from interfering with EDS' award.

EDS spokesman Bill Wright said company attorneys were studying Reagan's 48-page edict but found it complex and confusing.

"We're studying it and trying to see how it will affect us," he said.

Court challenges to the hostage agreement by the giant Dallas-based computer firm and other U.S. businesses are expected to delay any immediate movement of contested Iranian assets from U.S. banks to Iran, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

Part of the hostage agreement required the U.S. to suspend the roughly 300 pending lawsuits against Iran, putting them in the hands of a nine-member international tribunal to be established to arbitrate such disputes. Once the tribunal rules on the cases, the suits will be voided.

Treasury Department officials have declined to comment on whether EDS may be excepted from Reagan's order, since the firm's suit was filed before the hostages were taken. EDS is the only U.S. company with a verdict against Iran since the hostage takeover Nov. 4, 1979.

EDS' successful suit charged Iran failed to pay for data processing services it provided. The company also won an order attaching $20 million in a New York Bank to satisfy the judgment.

Officials said Treasury Department regulations implementing the hostage agreement would have a limited effect while the president's authority to suspend the lawsuits is challenged.

Under the hostage agreement, the United States has until July 19 to surrender the assets. Treasury officials said they were confident a favorable court decision would be rendered by that time.
